THE JUBILEE YEAR.

empire. The next child, born Nov. 9, 1841, is the present Albert Edward, prince of Wales; in 1863, March 10, he married the Princess Alexandra Caroline Mary Charlotte Louise Julia, oldest daughter of the king of Denmark, by whom he has two sons and three daughters, so the succession to the throne would seem well secured.
 Alice Maud Mary, third child of the queen, born April 25, 1843, married the Grand Duke of Hesse Darmstadt, and died Dec. 14, 1878. The fourth child, Alfred Ernest Albert, Duke of Edinburgh, born Aug. 6, 1844, married the Grand Duchess Marie of Russia, and is rear admiral of the royal navy. Helena Augusta Victoria, born May 25, 1846, is the wife of Prince Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein. Louise Caroline Alberta, born March 18, 1848, was married March 21, 1871, to John, Marquis of Lorne. These two are well and favorably known to Americans, as the marquis was some time governor general of Canada, and visited the United States during his term. Arthur William Patrick Albert, Duke of Connaught, was born May 1, 1850, and on March 13, 1879, married the Princess Louise Margaret of Prussia. Leopold George Duncan Albert, Duke of Albany, born April 7, 1853, was married April 27, 1882, to Princess Helene, of Waldeck Fyrmont, and died March 28, 1884. The queen's youngest child, Beatrice Mary Victoria Feodora, born April 14, 1857, was married July 23, 1885, to Prince Henry of Battenburg. We need not wonder that the marriage portions and large annuities asked by the queen and granted by parliament have often excited lively discussion, both in the house of commons and among the people. The intermarriages of royal families give rise to strange relationships in Europe; and it is matter of note that the longest wars are waged between nations whose monarchs are very near relatives. In fact all the monarchs of Europe to-day, except the sultan of Turkey, are blood relatives, every one of them descended on one side or the other from John of Gaunt, son of Edward III of England.

The queen has told us much of the happy life she led with the prince consort, especially at Balmoral, their country seat in the Scottish highlands. There nearly all the court ceremonial was laid aside, and the happy couple enjoyed themselves like a country gentleman and lady of the middle class. It was far otherwise at the regular British court, especially at Windsor castle, the established royal residence.
 This noted structure is situated just east of the little city of Windsor, a place of some 12,000 inhabitants, on a high ground above the right bank of the Thames, twenty-three miles from London. An iron bridge across the Thames connects Windsor with Eton, the seat of learning; both places are very beautiful and well supplied with elegant homes. The royal castle and attached buildings cover twelve acres of ground and stand in a tract of alternate grove, grass plat, lake and garden, called "little park," though it is four miles in circumference; southward from this extend the noted Windsor avenues of old trees, which connect with the "great park," eighteen miles in circumference, and west of that again is the great Windsor forest, with a circuit of fifty-six miles. Almost every rod of calculates the outgo of the sixpences more than royal ladies usually do. Even at Balmoral she devotes much of her time to studying the management of her estate and the condition of her funds, as well as the affairs of the nation. A lady in waiting, two young ladies as maids of honor, a cabinet minister, an equerry, a doctor and a secretary make up the entire suite, and the household service is quite limited.

 It is far otherwise at Windsor during the season. There is a regiment of attendants of all ranks, from duke to dustman and from lady of the bedchamber to scullion. The total is about 1,000. At the head of the household forces is the lord steward, with a salary of £10,000 a year, appointed by the prime minister, and therefore a political official. He is commander in chief of every employe in the household, except the ladies directly about the person of the queen, the religious staff and the stable corps. He appears at court on state occasions, and appoints all his subordinates. His lieutenant is the master of the

THE CAVALIERS' ROOM, WINDSOR CASTLE. household, who receives £1,200 a year, and has a private secretary at a good salary. Next comes the lord treasurer of the household, who pays the bills and gets a salary of £1,000 a year. These three constitute the board of green cloth, and sit as judges of all offenses committed in the palace; and to assist them and keep the record they have one secretary at $1,500 a year (as it would be in American money) and three accounting clerks at $1,000 each. Then there is the clerk of the kitchen at $2,500 a year, the chef at the same and his four assistant cooks at $1,750 each, the chief confectioner at $1,500 and his assistant at $1,300, the chief butler at $2,500, the table docket at $1,000, and his assistants at salaries somewhat less. There are also yeomen of the pantries, ladies of the linen room and a vast array of chambermaids, lamp lighters, washers, etc. The coal department alone employs thirteen persons.

Directly about her majesty's person are the mistress of the robes, the groom of the robes, the keeper of the private purse, or financial secretary to the queen, eight maids of honor, as many bed chamber women and numerous maids for other functions—all these under control of the lord chamberlain, who receives $10,000 a year and is assisted by the groom of the stole. Next to the ladies who attend directly on the queen come the gentlemen of the private household, viz: Eight lords in waiting, as many grooms in waiting and divers gentlemen ushers of the privy chamber, grooms of the privy chamber, grooms of the great chamber and pages of the back stairs. In short, life at the court even in the most ordinary times is carried on with such ponderous social machinery and routine that it almost makes one tired to hear of it. In addition to all these, there are two distinct sets of officials for extraordinary occasions, with independent functions and different codes of ceremonial and etiquette.

At the head of one of these is the marshal of the ceremonies. He manages the etiquette on all state occasions and conducts foreign ambassadors to the queen's presence. The chief of the court of the marshals, which has legal jurisdiction of all crimes and misdemeanors committed anywhere within the queen's private domain. It is a regular court of justice, with the same general law as other English courts, but with far more ceremony and vastly more expense in proportion to the work it does. The knight marshal, who is the same as sheriff or chief of police to this court, is a tolerably important personage with $2,500 a year, and has eight deputies, besides a few sergeants and secretaries. The foregoing gives but a mere outline of the system. There are departments of music, amusement, medicine, charity and literature, in all of which liberal salaries are paid.

The guest invited to dine with the queen is expected to remain at the castle over night. Arriving late in the afternoon he is conducted at once to his apartment, where he receives a call from the master of the household, now Sir J. C. Cowell, and if he desires, can have tea and lunch at once. Full court dress is required for the dinner; and at 8 o'clock the guests are conducted to the great gallery, as it is called—a private picture gallery, never opened to the public even when they are allowed to visit the castle. At 8:30 the queen and Princess Beatrice enter, salute the guests and lead the way to the dining room, which, if the company is small, is a comparatively cozy little room, with a broad window opening upon the central court of the palace. Sir J. C. Cowell arranges the guests and presides at the table. Conversation is not in order, though the queen often chats with her daughter. The time for eating is short, then the queen and the ladies retire and a few minutes after the master of the household gives the signal for the gentlemen to leave, and thereafter they can do very much as they please, as they will meet the queen no more. They can smoke or play billiards or what in the rooms for these purposes; they can listen to music in the drawing room, or read in the library, or yawn and stretch themselves in their own apartments, as, no doubt, many of them feel like doing. They can retire when they please and have breakfast in their own rooms, or in the gentlemen's hall down stairs, as they like, but they are expected to leave as early as 11 next day. Meanwhile the queen has spent the evening in her private room, has retired early, risen and breakfasted early, and taken her morning drive before noon.

WINDSOR CASTLE.

all these is historic ground; for this was a residence of the Saxon kings nearly 1,000 years ago, and has rarely ceased to be a royal home at any subsequent time. In those groves and shaded walks have been held many conferences and many arguments made that settled the fate of dynasties, and from the gates have ridden many couriers bearing dispatches that have changed the destiny of nations. The castle proper was founded by William the Conqueror, but almost entirely rebuilt by order of Edward III, the architect being the noted William of Wykeham, and, in 1824-'8, the edifice was finally and completely remodeled under direction of Sir Geoffrey Wyatville. St. George's chapel is noted for the beauty of its Gothic architecture, and in its vault lie the remains of many royal personages, among them Henry VI, Edward IV and his queen, Henry VIII and Jane Seymour, Charles I, two of the Georges and William IV. In the round tower state prisoners were formerly confined, and the unfortunate James I of Scotland was some time a prisoner there. Half a mile from Windsor castle is the small palace of Frogmore, which was the residence of Queen Charlotte and of Queen Victoria's mother, the Duchess of Kent.
 Despite the grandeur of Windsor and its historic associations with her most glorious ancestors, the queen's heart home is at Balmoral, in the Scottish highlands. So charming was life there to the queen and prince consort that she has taken the world into her confidence since her husband's death by writing a book on their life in the highlands. The prince leased the estate in 1848, and bought it in 1852. It is located in the parish of Craithie, Aberdeenshire, on the right bank of the River Dee, and comprises an area of 100,000 acres, in which is a tract of 1,000 acres of almost primeval forest, and 30,000 acres of deer park, which includes forest, open glade, hill and valley. The air is cool and invigorating in the warmest season. The Ben-a-board, a picturesque mountain peak near by, furnished Prince Albert his favorite evening view; so the queen chose that as the site for her memorial to the prince, which was erected in 1863.
 At Balmoral she has always been accompanied by her daughter Princess Beatrice, and the marriage of the latter to Prince Henry of Battenburg has made no difference in this respect. His pleasant manner has made him a great favorite at the little court and among the highlanders. There are few visitors to Balmoral. The Prince and Princess of Wales often come, making their home at Aberdeenshire, and at times other members of the royal family or invited guests are there. The queen spends much of her time in the open air, walking about the grounds or in the grove with her favorite collie dogs, or seated on the lawn, reading, or driving about the neighborhood, occasionally visiting the cottagers (she might call them cottagers) frequently, and they have many tokens of her kindness in the form of books, pictures and photographs. She is often present at a christening or a funeral. But with all these gracious ways, her majesty is decidedly "near," as the peasantry say—a British form of the American slang "close"—that is, she
