THE DAILY WHIG.

"Opifer per Orbem Dicor."

Sir John Macdonald has made explanations anent the negotiations on the fishery question. It appears that every step of the English government towards a settlement of the difficulty has been taken with the consent and knowledge of the Canadian government. There has been no "give away" of Canadian interests, no compromising action suggested, no abandonment of a single contention in regard to the rights and privileges of the dominion contemplated. The announcement has been well received by all parties. It puts an end to the cock and bull stories which have been current in political circles of late.

When it was announced that an interprovincial convention would be held certain conservative papers declared that it was for the encouragement of provincial raids upon the dominion treasury. Mr. Mercier holds a different opinion of the convention. It will deal with territorial rights, changes in the constitution, disallowance of provincial legislation, vacancies in the senate, extension of the franchise, and other questions. Mr. Mercier says the idea is not to plan how best to assail the dominion when the provinces are, financially, in needy circumstances. The financial relations of the provinces with the dominion will be considered, but with a view to the prevention of raids and unfair demands. And surely there is nothing unfair about such a proposition.

The Medical Council of Ontario has decided to seek legislation having for its object the compelling of municipal corporations to make provision for the payment of medical men in attendance on the poor. They will never get it; at least they don't deserve it. No medical man is obliged to prescribe for the poor if he does not feel like it, and parliament will not put in his hands the power to tax the municipality for a service which he grudgingly and indifferently performs. If it comes to this that the medical men cannot exercise their talents occasionally, like other people, in the interest of the poor, and "combine" in order to carry their purpose into execution, a poor-physician will have to be appointed. That the medical council, however, is not suffering of poverty is indicated by the fact that the fees of the examiners are recommended to be increased $50, inclusive of travelling expenses, that there is a balance of $8,045.63 in the treasurer's hands, that the assets amounts to over $53,000 and the liabilities to less than $20,000.

OUR NOBLE QUEEN.

Fifty years ago to-day Queen Victoria accepted, with fear and trembling, the throne of Great Britain. And she had reason to feel anxious. She was a mere girl. Young as she was, however, she recognized the value of constitutional government, and by it the destinies of the nation have been wisely and prudently directed. True, many administrations have fallen—many statesmen to whom she entrusted the seals of office have passed away—but the principle of popular government survives, and will no doubt survive throughout the Victorian period. As sovereign she reigns, and yet not she but the sovereign people, whose parliaments are representative of them, their feelings, their sentiments, their wishes. The people, therefore, are without legislative grievances, and if they labour under any disability which parliament or government can remove, and does not, it is their privilege to petition her majesty; and they have never done so in vain. Monarchy in Britain will remain so long as the royal head of it is considerate of public opinion and allows the people the freedom of thought and purpose and action which they to-day enjoy.

The 21st is the date appointed by the queen herself for the general celebration of the greatest event in her life. The festivities in London will continue for a week, and to them her majesty will lend all the eclat possible by her participation in them. The chief feature will be the state procession of to-morrow. It will be in imitation of that of 1837. Macaulay tells us that it was an ancient usage that before a coronation the sovereign with all the heralds, judges, councillors, lords and great dignitaries rode in state from the Tower of Westminister. Of these cavalades the most glorious was that which passed through the capital while the feelings excited by the Restoration were still in full vigour. It is on record that James II ordered an estimate to be made of the cost of such a procession, and found that it would amount to about half as much as he proposed to expend in covering his wife with trinkets. "He accordingly," writes Macaulay, "determined to be profuse where he ought to have been frugal, and niggardly where he might have been profuse. More than a hundred thousand pounds were laid out in dressing the queen, and the procession from the Tower was omitted. The folly of this course is obvious. If jaggantry be of any use in politics it is of use as a means of striking the imagination of the multitude.

It is surely the height of absurdity to shut out the people from a show of which the main object is to make an impression on the populace. James would have shown a more judicious munificence and a more judicious parsimony if he had traversed London from east to west with the accustomed pomp, and had ordered the robes of his wife to be somewhat less thickly set with pearls and diamonds. His example was, however, long followed by his successors; and sums which, well employed, would have offered exquisite gratification to a large part of the nation, were squandered on an exhibition to which only a few thousands were admitted. At length the old feature was partially revived. On the day of the coronation of Queen Victoria there was a procession in which many deficiencies might have been noted, but which was seen by half a million of her subjects, and which undoubtedly gave her greater pleasure and called forth far greater enthusiasm than the more costly display which was witnessed by a select circle within the abbey. We quote from Macaulay to show the importance that is attached to the procession, to which the queen, in her love of plainness now, at first demurred, but afterwards consented on learning that its failure to equal that of fifty years ago would cause dissatisfaction and profound disappointment.

A queen for fifty years! What amazing changes have taken place in that space of time! Many of them are noted in the review of events printed in other columns. Future historians may complete the work which present historians have so well begun, but in any case the half will never be told. Nations have lost in prestige and power, but Great Britain has increased in both. The sun still shines, and always, upon some part of her territory, and from the great heart of the empire there still proceeds the influences that make for civilization, peace and prosperity. England is not aggressive, but rather protective, in her government. She seeks the possession of no new territory by conquest, but she relinquishes none at the dictation of any power, and unless it is the people's will, exhibited by their opposition to a spirited foreign policy, the supremacy of the British on land and sea will never cease to be. Nationally, politically, religiously, morally, there are no evidences of weakness; on the contrary there is the vigour and strength which give buoyancy to the opinion that the Anglo Saxon race, solidified by federation, will, as some contend, be yet the controlling force in the world.

A gifted writer has, in a few lines, paid this tribute to the Victorian era. "It is an era," said he, "by itself—an era in which all phases of thought, scientific, literary and religious, are in harmony with the altered conditions of life—an era in which the great nations of the earth are being drawn together by the inter-change of thought, of labor, and of international courtesy." A good woman, by principle and precept, has shown herself to be worthy of the exalted station she has occupied. She has been from the beginning on the side of purity and right, and so far as personal interest and personal example could go she has been queenly in the highest acceptance of the term. She began life with the vow that she would be "a good sovereign," valuing goodness before greatness, and to the fulfillment of her purpose may be attributed all that is gracious and purifying and uplifting in her reign.

The observance of the queen's jubilee in Kingston promises to be most fitting. On the morrow there will be religious devotions, special services being held, thanks given for the long and happy reign of the queen, and prayers offered for a continuation of these blessings. On June 30th and July 1st there will be general rejoicing, a celebration of the jubilee itself. That the people will, on both occasions, show a deep interest in the proceedings, we need not question. Their loyalty to the queen is unimpeachable, sincere, and of that fact they have given the proof oft and many a time. They can sing as lustily as any other whom the British standard waves, "God Save the Queen."

FATAL BOATING ACCIDENTS.

One on the Danube Leads to the Loss of Scores of Lives—Finding of Bodies. PESTH, June 20.—A party of pilgrims, crossing the Danube at Paks, was thrown into the water by the capsizing of a boat; 127 were rescued, and 87 are still missing. The bodies of 101, who were drowned, have been recovered.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., June 20.—James Redhead and Harry Anderson went out boating to-day. When near the middle of the lake they disrobed and jumped into the water to bathe. The boat not being anchored drifted rapidly away, and the young men were drowned before assistance could reach them.

LOOKING AFTER DAVITT.

He Was Too Smart for the Police—He Expects to Go to Gaol Again. LONDON, June 19.—Along with stringent orders to suppress the meetings at Bodyke instructions were also given to arrest Michael Davitt if he was caught addressing meetings. At neither of the two meetings which were held did the police, fusiliers, or cavalry arrive in time, so Davitt escaped. He has received from all parts of England and Ireland a multitude of letters, thanking him for the stand he took at Bodyke. He is now quietly at home again, at the Land league cottage, waiting till the Coercion bill becomes law, when he is confident he will go to prison for the fourth time. Before that, however, he will make one more public appearance, as he has accepted an invitation to address a mass meeting at Glasgow the week after next.

The Closing Scenes.

LONDON, June 19.—The expected scene in the house of commons, when the climax of the Coercive clause was reached, did not come off. As the clock in the tower struck ten Sir Charles Russell uttered the last word of the debate. The other fourteen clauses of the bill were passed en bloc. Every one is serious about it this morning. The so-called "party of prudence and constitutionalism" has set an example to some future party of democratic torism of which it will not be slow to avail itself. The coalitionists, of course, are jubilant, and talk as if the Irish question was nearly settled already.
