SEE: A HISTORY OF ADVENTURE.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD. CHAPTER XV.-AYESHA GIVES JUDGMENT.

THE next thing that I remember was opening my eyes and perceiving the form of Job, who had now practically recovered from his attack of fever. He was standing in the ray of light that pierced into the cave from the outer air, shaking out my clothes as a makeshift for brushing them, which he could not do because there was no brush, and then folding them up neatly and laying them on the foot of the stone couch.

This done, he got my traveling dressing-case out of the Gladstone bag, and opened it ready for my use. First he stood it on the foot of the couch also, then, being afraid, I suppose, that I should kick it off, he placed it on a leopard-skin on the floor, and stood back a step or two to observe the effect. It was not satisfactory, so he shut up the bag, turned it on end, and having rested it against the foot of the couch, placed the dressing-case on it.

Next, he looked at the pots full of water, which constituted our washing apparatus. "Ah!" I heard him murmur, "no hot water in this beastly place. I suppose these poor creatures only use it to boil each other in," and he sighed deeply.

"What is the matter, Job?" I said. "Beg pardon, sir," he said, touching his hair. "I thought you were asleep, sir; and I am sure you look as though you want it. One might think from the look of you that you had been having a night of it."

I only groaned by way of answer. I had, indeed, been having a night of it, such as I hope never to have again.

"How is Mr. Leo, Job?" "Much the same, sir. If he don't soon mend, he'll end, sir, and that's all about it; though I must say that that there savage Ustane do her best for him, almost like a baptized Christian. She is always hanging round and looking after him, and if I venture to interfere, it's awful to see her; her hair seems to stand on end, and she curses and swears away in her heathen talk-at least I fancy she must be cursing from the look of her."

"And what do you do then?" "I make her a polite bow, and I say, 'Young woman, your position is one that I don't quite understand, and can't recognize. Let me tell you that I have a duty to perform to my master as he is incapacitated by illness, and that I am going to perform it until I am incapacitated too; but she don't take no heed, not she-only curses and swears away worse than ever. Last night she put her hand under that sort of night-shirt she wears and whips out a knife with a kind of a curl in the blade; so I whips out my revolver, and we walks round and round each other, till at last she bursts out laughing. It isn't nice 'treatment for a Christian man to have to put up with from a savage, however handsome she may be; but it is what people most expect as is fools enough." (Job laid great emphasis on the "fools") "to come to such a place to look for things no man is meant to find. It's a judgment on us, sir-that's my opinion; and I, for one, is of opinion that the judgment isn't half done yet; and when it is done, we shall be done too, and just stop in these beastly caves with the ghosts and the corpses for once and all. And now, sir, I must be seeing about Leo's broth, if that wild-cat will let me; and perhaps you would like to get up, sir, because it's past nine o'clock."

Job's remarks were not of an exactly cheering order to a man who had passed such a night as I had; and what is more, they had the weight of truth. Taking one thing with another, it appeared to me to be an utter impossibility that we should escape from the place where we were. Supposing that Leo recovered, and supposing that she would let us go, which was exceedingly doubtful, and that she did not "blast" us in some moment of vexation, and that we were not hot-potted by the Amahagger, it would be quite impossible for us to find our way across the net-work of marshes which, stretching for scores and scores of miles, formed a stronger and more impassable fortification round the various Amahagger households than any that could be built or designed by man. No, there was but one thing to do-face it out; and, speaking for my own part, I was so intensely interested in the whole weird story that, so far as I was concerned, notwithstanding the shattered state of my nerves, I asked nothing better, even if my life paid forfeit to my curiosity.

After I had dressed myself I passed into the eating, or rather embalming, chamber, and had some food, which was, as before, brought to me by the girl mutants. When I had finished I went and saw poor Leo, who was quite off his head, and did not even know me. I asked Ustane how she thought he was, but she only shook her head and began to cry a little. Evidently her hopes were small; and I then and there made up my mind that, if it were in any way possible, I would get her to come and see him. Surely she would cure him if she chose; at any rate, she said she could. Whilst I was in the room, Billal entered, and also shook his head.

"He will die at night," he said. "God forbid, my father," I answered and turned away with a heavy heart. "She-who-must-be-obeyed commands thy presence, my Baboon," said the old man as soon as we got to the curtain, "but, oh, my dear son, be more careful. Yesterday I made sure in my heart that she would blast these when thou didst not crawl upon thy stomach before her. She is sitting in the great hall to do justice upon those who would have smitten thee and the Lion. Come on, my son; come swiftly."

I turned, and followed him down the passage, and when we reached the great central cave saw that many Amahagger, some robed, and some merely clad in the sweet simplicity of a leopard skin, were hurrying up it. We mingled with the throng, and walked up the enormous, and indeed almost interminable, cave. All the way up it the walls were elaborately sculptured, and every twenty paces or so passages opened out of it at right angles, leading, Billal told me, to tombs hollowed in the rock by "the people who were before." Nobody visited those tombs now, he said; and I must say that my heart rejoiced when I thought of the opportunities of antiquarian research that opened out before me.

At last we came to the head of the cave, where there was a rock dais almost exactly similar to the one on which we had been so furiously attacked, a fact that proved to me that these dais must have been used as altars, probably for the celebration of religious ceremonies, and more especially of rites connected with the interment of the dead. On either side of this dais were passages leading, Billal informed me, to other caves full of dead bodies. "Indeed," he added, "the whole mountain is full of dead, and nearly all of them are perfect."

In front of the dais were gathered a great number of people of both sexes, who stood staring about in their peculiar gloomy fashion, which would have reduced Mark Tapley himself to misery in about five minutes. On the dais was a rude chair of black wood inlaid with ivory, with a seat made of grass fiber, and a footstool formed of a wooden slab attached to the chair.

Suddenly there was a cry of "Hiya! Hiya!" ("She! She!") and thereupon the entire crowd instantly precipitated itself upon the ground, and lay there as though it were individually and collectively stricken dead, leaving me standing up like some solitary survivor of a massacre. As they did so a long string of guards began to defile from a passage to the left, and ranged themselves on either side of the dais. Then followed about a score of male mutes, then as many women mutes with lamps, and then a tall white figure, swathed from head to foot, in whom I recognized She herself. She mounted the dais and sat down upon the chair, and spoke to me in Greek-I suppose because she did not wish those present to understand what she said. "Come hither, Holly," she said, "and sit at my feet, and see me do justice on those who would have slain thee. Forgive me if my Greek doth halt like a lame man; it is so long since I have heard the sound of it that my tongue is stiff, and will not bend to the words."
