DEALERS IN PETROLEUM.

The New York Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange.

The rapid growth of New York city's business has created a new organization known as the Consolidated Stock and Petroleum exchange, which is erecting a magnificent structure at the corner of Exchange place and Broadway, and bids fair to soon rival the old and noted stock exchange. The new body now has 2,403 members, and seats worth $900 six months ago are now held at $1,600, with a rising tendency. In 1886 the building company was organized and the managers promise to have the building ready for occupancy next fall. It has a frontage on Broadway of 90 feet 11 inches, on Exchange place of 132 feet 4 inches and on New street of 87 feet 7 inches. It has a basement story of 15 feet, a main story of 36 feet for the exchange, and above that four stories for offices, of which there are to be 120, to be reached both by elevators and large stairways, without going through the exchange. All the offices and rooms will be lighted from an interior courtyard, and will be handsomely furnished in hard wood, the interiors of light colors. There will be a fine restaurant in the basement and all the rooms will be heated by steam.

The new exchange is the result of a consolidation. The New York Mining Stock ex-change was organized in 1875 and has successively absorbed the National Petroleum exchange, the Miscellaneous Security board, the American Mining board and the New York Petroleum and Stock board—the result being the present powerful Consolidated Stock and Petroleum exchange. It has all the dash and vigor of a young and growing body, and on several recent days more shares of Reading stock were traded in on the Consolidated than on the old stock exchange. But the growth of business will soon justify the existence and insure the continued activity of both. At present the membership of the new organization outnumbers that of the stock exchange by some

His Hat Full of Eggs.

"Have you heard of the latest novelty in hats?" inquired a man of his companion, as they were each quaffing a mug of brown stout.

"No, what is it?" was the response.

"Well, it is a hat worn by a man who serves morning papers on a suburban route. A number of his customers, nearly all of whom keep chickens, have noticed for several weeks past that their eggs had acquired a habit of disappearing each morning, after the paper was deposited on the sill of the kitchen window. Suspicion fe'll upon the dispenser of the products of the press, and a watch was set, although no one could imagine where he could stow the eggs. The denouement was startling in its novelty.

"On one side of his hat, which was a stiff one, he had a panel that worked by a spring. He would pull the latter, the panel would slide back, in would drop the egg or eggs, and back would spring the panel. By this method he managed to carry home every day a dozen or more eggs. At last fashion and utility have joined hands."-Philadelphia Call.

Death of W. E. Sheridan.

The actor, W. E. Sheridan, who died in Australia a short time ago, was perhaps best known as a star in the role of Louis XI, though he was noted as one of the most versatile geniuses of the profession, and supported John T. Raymond as a comedian; did high comedy with Julia Dean Hayne, and was at various times leading man for stars so diversant as Lucille Western, Charlotte Thompson and Adele Belgarde, He began Lis starring career in Halifax in 1879. His first Australia tour was begun in 1882. He married Louise Davenport. In 1880, when he went to England with "The Danites," Mamie Sheridan accompanied him, though not to play. Among the victims of the Metis, which sunk in Long Island sound, was the girl born to Sarah Hayes, Sheridan's first wife, a Boston girl. Mamie Sheridan was also at one time his wife.

Sheridan, in "The Duke's Motto," was also very successful, and critics say some of his best work was as the dialect Italian in "Our Boarding House," which he first undertook with Robson and Crane in New York.

Another Destroyer.

The British have still another torpedo boat launched, a boat supposed to unite in the highest degree the qualities of speed and destructiveness. It is known as the Falke (the name of a class, not of one boat), and has made the extraordinary speed of twenty-six and one-balf miles an hour, carrying a load of fifteen tons, and maintaining that peed for two hours. The boat is 135 feet long, with fourteen feet breadth of beam, and its steering capacities are so perfect that it went around a circle with a diameter of 100 yards. The boiler is capable of developing 1,600 horse power, and there are six engines-one for driving the boat, two for compressing the air for the torpedoes, one for the dynamo that gives the electric light, one for forcing air, and one to be run with the distilling apparatus for supplying drinking water. There are three guns on deck and a tower carrying two torpedo guns, which can be trained to any angle and turned toward any point by revolving the tower. The forward part of the boat is thoroughly protected by a "turtle back," within which are good quarters for the crew. Altogether the Falke type adds some very worthy members to the fleet of scientific destroyers now affect.
