"It Saved My Life"

Is a common expression, often heard from those who have realized, by personal use, the curative powers of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

About six months ago I had a severe Hemorrhage of the Lungs, brought on by a distressing Cough, which deprived me of sleep and rest. I had used various cough balsams and expectorants, without obtaining relief. A friend advised me to try

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

I did so, and am happy to say that it helped me at once. By continued use this medicine cured my cough, and, I am satisfied, saved my life.—Mrs. E. Coburn, 18 Second St., Lowell, Mass. I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for over 5 years, and sincerely believe I should have been in my grave, had it not been for this medicine. It has cured me of a dangerous affection of the lungs, for which I had almost despaired of ever finding a remedy.—D. A. McMullen, Windsor, Province of Ontario. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life. Two years ago I took a very severe Cold which settled on my lungs. I consulted physicians, and took the remedies they prescribed, but failed to obtain relief until I began using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Two bottles of this medicine completely restored my health.—Lizzie M. Allen, West Lancaster, Ohio.

SHE: A HISTORY OF ADVENTURE.

BY H. RIDER HAGGARD.

HE conversation after this was of such a desultory order that I do not recollect it. For some reason, perhaps from a desire to keep her identity and character in reserve,

Ayesha did not talk freely, as she usually did. Presently, however, she informed Leo that she had arranged a dance that night for our amusement. I was astonished to hear this, as I fancied that the Amahagger were much too gloomy a folk to indulge in any such frivolity; but, as will presently more clearly appear, it turned out that an Amahagger dance had little in common with such fantastic festivities in other countries, savage or civilized.

Then, as we were about to withdraw, she suggested that Leo might like to see some of the wonders of the caves, and as he gladly assented to this, thither we departed, accompanied by Job and Billali. To describe our visit would only be to repeat a great deal of what I have already said. The tombs we entered were indeed different, for the whole rock was a honeycomb of sepulchres, but the contents were nearly always the same. Afterward we visited the pyramid of bones that had haunted my dreams on the previous night, and from thence went down a long passage to one of the great vaults occupied by the bodies of the poor citizens of Imperial Kor. These bodies were not nearly so well preserved, and many of them had no linen covering on them, also they were buried from five hundred to one thousand in a single large vault, the corpses in many instances being thickly piled one upon another, like a heap of slain.

Leo was of course intensely interested in this stupendous and unequalled sight, which was, indeed, enough to awake all the imagination a man had in him into the most active life. But to poor Job it did not prove attractive. His nerves—already seriously shaken by what he had undergone since we had arrived in this terrible country—were, as may be imagined, still further disturbed by the spectacle of all this mass of departed humanity, whose forms still remained perfect before his eyes, though their voices were forever lost in the eternal silence of the tomb. Nor was he comforted when old Billali, by way of soothing his evident agitation, informed him that he should not be frightened of these dead things, as he would soon be like them himself.

"There's a nice thing to say of a man, sir," he ejaculated, when I translated this little remark, "but there, what can one expect of an old man-eating savage? No! but what I dare say he's right," and Job sighed.

When we had finished inspecting the caves, we returned and had our meal, for it was now past four in the afternoon, and we needed some food and rest, especially Leo. At six o'clock we all, including Job, waited on Ayesha, who set to work to terrify our poor servant still further by showing him pictures on the pool of water in the font-like vessel. She learnt from me that he was one of seventeen children, and then bid him think of all his brothers and sisters, or as many of them as he could, gathered together in his father's cottage. Then she told him to look in the water, and there, reflected from its stilly surface, was that dead scene of many years gone by, as it was recalled to our poor servant's brain. Some of the faces were clear enough but some were mere blurs and splashes, or with one feature grossly exaggerated; the fact being that, in these instances, Job had been unable to recall the exact appearance of the individuals, or remembered them only by a peculiarity of his tribe, and the water could only reflect what he saw with his mind's eye. For it must be remembered that She's power in this matter was strictly limited; she could apparently, except in very rare instances, only photograph upon the water what was actually in the mind of some one present, and then only by his will.

But if she was personally acquainted with a locality, she could, as in the case of ourselves and the whale-boat, throw its reflection upon the water, and also the reflection of anything extraneous that was passing there at the time. This power, however, did not extend to the minds of others. For instance, she could show me the interior of my college chapel as I remembered it, but not as it was at the moment of reflection; for where other people were concerned, her art was strictly limited to the facts or memories present to their consciousness at the moment. So much was this so that when we tried, for her amusement, to show her pictures of noted buildings, such as St. Paul's or the Houses of Parliament, the result was most imperfect; for, of course, though we had a good general idea of their appearance, we could not recall all the architectural details, and therefore the minutiae necessary to a perfect reflection were wanting. But Job could not be got to understand this, and so far from accepting a natural explanation of the matter, which was, after all, though strange enough in all conscience, nothing more than an instance of glorified and perfect telepathy, he set the whole thing down as a manifestation of the blackest magic. I shall never forget the howl of terror which he uttered when he saw the more or less perfect portraits of his long-scattered brethren staring at him from the quiet water, or the merry peal of laughter with which Ayesha greeted his consternation. As for Leo, he did not like it either, but ran his fingers through his yellow curls, and remarked that it gave him the creeps.

After about an hour of this amusement, in the latter part of which Job did not participate, the mutes by signs indicated that Billali was waiting for an audience. Accordingly he was told to "crawl up," which he did as awkwardly as usual, and announced that the dance was ready to begin if She and the white strangers would be pleased to attend. Shortly afterward we all rose, and Ayesha having thrown a dark cloak (the same, by the way, that she had worn when I saw her cursing by the fire) over her white wrappings, we started. The dance was to be held in the open air, on the smooth rocky plateau in front of the great cave, and thither we made our way. About fifteen paces from the mouth of the cave we found three chairs placed, and here we sat and waited, for as yet no dancers were to be seen. The night was

The serpent Mound.

One of the most singular real estate investments on record is the purchase just consummated by the Peabody Institute and Harvard University of what is known as "The Serpent Mound," in Adams county, O., about twenty miles from Hillsborough. It is a relic of the mound builders' age and has long been known in scientific and archeologic circles on account of its peculiar conformation, resembling a gigantic serpent. It covers or embraces nearly sixty acres of ground, for which the purchasers paid $70 per acre. Their sole object is to preserve the relic, which was being gradually obliterated by plowing.—Indianapolis Journal.

Solving a Problem.

Jabez Hall, an aged and reputable planter, living near Mariana, Ark., advertised for a wife, and the answers were so numerous that he was at a loss how to choose. His gigantic intellect came to his rescue, however. He gave each applicant a number, and, writing the numbers on separate cards, put them in a box and shook them up well. Then he blindfolded his little grandchild and had her draw a card from the box. He is now corresponding with the lady to whom the card had been allotted, and it is probable that a wedding will result.—New York Sun.

Tied Their Tails Together.

A small boy seeing two Chinese looking in a Kearney street shop window the other day slipped up behind them and tied their cues together. When they learned what had happened they rushed after their tormentor, who stood grinning from behind a telegraph pole, but as they took opposite sides of the pole in passing they were brought up with a jerk that threw them down, and it was not until the services of a police officer had been secured that they could take their several ways amid an amused throng of spectators.—San Francisco Examiner.

An Appetizing Breakfast Dish.

The trimmings of cold boiled or roasted ham may be utilized in a very appetizing breakfast dish of ham and eggs on toast. Chop the ham fine and spread it upon delicate slices of buttered toast, and place in the oven for three or four minutes. Beat up six eggs with half a cupful of milk; add a little pepper and salt. Put this in a saucpan over the fire, add two ounces of butter and stir till it begins to thicken. Take it off the fire, stir for a moment, then spread on the ham and serve immediately.

A Dusty Carpet.

Constant sweeping is what wears out carpets. A carpet often looks dusty so soon after it has been swept that you know it does not really need sweeping again. In that case, wet a cloth or sponge and wipe off the dust. A few drops of ammonia in the water will brighten the colors.

Miraculous.

"My miraculous cure was that I had suffered from kidney disease for about two years, was off work all that time. A friend told me of B.B.B., I tried it, and am happy to say that I was cured by two bottles. Wm. Tier, St. Marys, Ont.
