FORESTS AND CROPS.

It is indisputable that the presence or absence of forests have much to do with the temperature of certain localities; but Mr. Phipps is convinced that forests have to do with the crops. In order to satisfy himself on certain points, making his experiences square with his theories, he spent some weeks in Markham, taking that township as a typical one of the old fall wheat-growing townships of Ontario. He has obtained opinions from about a hundred farmers, observing at the same time the fields concerning which statements were made. He finds his belief confirmed, that, now the crops have mostly lost the shelter formerly given by the forests, either windbreaks of trees must be generally planted or the growing of fall wheat must be abandoned. In all cases where shelter yet exists good crops are the rule, while where it does not they are the exception. Under-draining does not appear to be as important as shelter, for undrained fields near the bush yield well, while good drained land, unsheltered, often fails to give half a crop. Many farmers are planting rows of maples, while some are using pine, cedar and spruce, for these give the winter and spring shelter which is needed. Mr. Phipps has now left for another township, where spring wheat is generally grown, to compare it with the other. The results of his enquiry will be embodied in his forthcoming report. It will have a special interest to every farmer

A WORD IN SEASON.

The Kingston Whig has hopes of commercial union "because Sir John is always cute enough to climb in with the majority." Evidently the Whig has a low estimate of the cuteness of its own leaders. But if commercial union should pass what would become of the iron policy, of which the Whig approves? It must not expect to eat its cake and keep it, too. -Toronto World.

We are not aware that the Whig's "leaders" are in any way embarrassed by the commercial union issue. Commercial union is essentially an agriculturist movement, and its growing popularity is alarming to the ministerial party, the members of which are doing all they can to decry it. We repeat if commercial union continues its hold upon the public the premier will find some occasion and some excuse for expressing himself in favour of it. He advocated the national policy because he saw it was a popular thing to do and calculated to promote the welfare of his party; he will be as ready to preach commercial union for a similar purpose and under similar circumstances. As for the iron policy the Whig's position is thoroughly understood. It desires to see the mineral resources of the country developed, but it has not laboured under the delusion that this development cannot be as well brought about under commercial union as under the national policy; indeed the chances of prosperity would be infinitely improved under unrestricted reciprocity. Sir Charles Tupper has clapped on heavy duties for the ostensible purpose of leading to the manufacture of iron in Canada, but the people have no confidence in the safety of his rule. Witness the visit of a deputation of capitalists to Ottawa not long since for the express purpose of having a personal assurance from him of the permanence of the iron policy ere they would even think of making an investment of their means in smelting works. It is American capital that is making the mining interests of this district so valuable, and beyond a doubt this capital would be more liberally invested with than without commercial union.

WOMEN'S INFLUENCE.

Lady Borthwick, in the North American Review, recounts the origin, rise, and progress of the Primrose league, a woman's organization and one that has exerted a powerful influence in late English elections. She is certainly not wrong in alleging that it is to a certain degree a social revolution. It was suggested by Lord Randolph Churchill, Sir Drummond Wolff, Sir John Gurch, Sir Algernon Borthwick, and Col. Barnaby, all excepting the latter still active in political life, and he a hero of the "Goudan campaign. The aim and object of the new society was: (1) The maintenance of religion, law, order, and the integrity of the empire; (2) the encouragement of voluntary canvassing at the time of elections; (3) the establishment of habitations or clubs all over the kingdom, which should hold meetings and elect members for the furtherance of the principles stated; (4) the strict enquiry into the registration of all conservative voters. The Primrose league had been started two years when a prominent member of it suggested the formation of a ladies' branch. It was adopted. Organization followed. Many of the great employers gave aid, and now, at this moment, an hundred and six habitations have been formed by the dames of the league, numbering from 200 to 600 persons in a club. Since March, 1885, the league has numbered 1,043 dames of the grand council, and 34,000 dames of the league. During the late elections as many as 2,000 joined in a day.

But what have they done? They have been frequently heard of, the Primrose league in England, being as great a menace to some candidates as the National league in Ireland. The women have been found of immense service in elections, and for special efforts 371 clasps have been conferred, and 53 orders of merit awarded. An instance of what the women can do is cited by Lady Borthwick. During the 'second election in South Kensington a radical candidate was started five days before going to the poll. There was some difficulty about getting out the voting papers. At once some 100 ladies enrolled themselves, and so admirably, so steadily, so efficiently did they work, that in less than twenty-four hours 10,000 voting cards were written, directed, stamped and posted. But it would be useless to attempt to detail all that the ladies of the league have accomplished. Mrs. Fawcett, in addressing the students of the Bedford college in November last, commended it in these terms: "It is an undeniable fact that the Primrose league has done more to give women the position which has been so long and so rigidly withheld than any other organization in this or any period of the world's history. The originators of the movement showed their ranks, and, so far, I do not think there is one who has betrayed the confidence reposed in her by showing that she in any way merits the legal stigma of being classed with lunatics and that ilk. It is an admitted fact, by friend and foe, that the Primrose league throughout the length and breadth of the land has rendered the organized help of women in such a way as no help has ever been given before at parliamentary or municipal elections. It has been the frank and universal admission of successful conservative candidates that they have been lifted into parliament by the Primrose league."

"That woman's power is unbounded is undeniable," says Lady Borthwick; "to make women noble you must give them responsibility." We are inclined to endorse the sentiment, and to hail women's interference in the political field as an inestimable boon. In Canada they have not been encouraged to use their power in educating and shaping public sentiment outside of the temperance question, but they may have to be relied upon by-and-bye to offset the evil influences which a degraded electorate is so fond of. The women, taken as a whole, have an infinitely higher regard for the franchise than the men, and if they had the votes, and an organization like unto the Primrose league, there would be less trading, at least successfully, in political turpitude and dishonour.

GENTS' FURNISHINGS.

SEASONABLE POETRY.

How dear to my head was the Fur Cap of winter. The nice curly cap that now I am fain To swap for the sable and felted newcomer, Which, because it's so light I return to again.

But like to the Crofters' thatched hut of Kilkenny, That the soft summer breeze may creep thro' any day, Is the welcome Straw Hat, because lighter than any, And cheaper; it costs but a quarter in May, And GALLOWAY'S is the place to get it.

The above soliloquy forced itself upon me in consequence of the return of spring weather, and as others sing it let them remember that GALLOWAY sang it first, and give him a call at

FOR IMPORTERS!

I have just published a book styled "BERLIN ARTICLES,"

Which is undoubtedly of great value to all foreign importing firms as it is a Book of Reference for all Berlin Export Articles. All branches of trade are given in it, and the leading establishments in each are mentioned.

The object of my book is to make importers of all countries in the world acquainted both with the articles manufactured for exportation to Berlin and with the chief makers of them. Price per book, edition 1887, 5sh. only. Quarto size, in elegant binding, sent post free on receipt of the amount.

Gustav Hildebrandt's Export Advertising Office, Berlin N.W. 113A, Alexandrinen Str. 111, N.W. -As the text of my book is published in the German, English, French and Spanish languages, and as it points out only the very best sources for especially valuable and profitable novelties and special articles, it may well be termed an indispensable book of reference for all trading firms.

POINTERS FROM THE PRESS.

Must Draw the Line Somewhere. Baltimore American. "Canada wants reciprocity, but she draws the line at divorce"

No Fear of the Hereafter. Watertown Times. And some newspapers are even talking politics in this weather.

It is Exceedingly Suggestive. Toronto World. The sale of beer in the Scott act county of Dufferin, upon the property and under the patronage of an officer of the Ontario government, must be a suggestive spectacle to the prohibitionists of this province.

Not Norquay but all Manitoba. Ottawa Free Press. The Dominion government could call out an army of four or five thousand men to put down a few half-starved, half-clothed, half-armed halfbreeds, but they have yet mustered courage enough to deal with the rebellious acts of Mr. Norquay.

'Twas So From the Beginning. Hamilton Times. Cablegrams from China tell of terrible sufferings from floods and famine. At the same time the news is sent that a wife has been chosen for the youthful emperor, and that five million dollars will be spent in rejoicing. This is a queer world.

Putting on the Lash. Toronto News. The lash is a degrading punishment, and ought not to be inflicted so long as there is any reasonable chance that a prisoner can be reclaimed to decent citizenship. But a wretch who can be guilty of the crime for which the cat-o-nine-tails is provided, is already so degraded that no punishment can further debase him.

Always a Sly Fox. Medicine Hat Times. Farmer Jones, of Medicine Hat, used to hoe potatoes in company with Sir John Macdonald near Kingston. If old Mr. Jones was premier of Canada he would not hear of his old chum hoeing potatoes at this late day. The old man says he always knew John A. was a sly fox even in gathering potatoes. When Jones dug up the spuds and picked them Sir John held the basket and all the potatoes, too. Jones says he knew Sir John would make a spoon or spoil the horn, and no doubt he has spoiled many of the latter. Little Johnny was up to all these tricks. He was never known to pull a sleigh up a hill in his youth; he preferred rather to ride down and usually persuaded the boys to haul him up again. And he keeps right on doing this kind of thing.

IN MEMORIAM.

Lines affectionately inscribed to Mrs. E. J. Copeland on the death of her only son, with whom she travelled for his health from her Canadian home to Florida's shores, and to California's groves, where at Los Angeles he died. His remains were interred at Mt. Laurel cemetery, Goderich.

How I mourn thee my first-born, my well beloved son, And I'll try on bended knees to say "Thy will be done" Every night and morn, until my race on earth is run; God knoweth best.

The birds are corolling gaily o'er thy new made grave, Sweet flowers are shedding their fragrance o'er thy heart so brave; 'Midst the trees the breezes play as if thy love they crave, Whilst thou'rt at rest.

Yet thou'rt happy in thy home by the golden river, Pouring forth thy praises to the Heavenly Giver Of celestial and terrestrial life, who sends death's quiver To mortal breast.

There we'll meet again, where we'll dwell in raptures, With Cherubin and Seraphim we'll sing thy dearest lay; 'Tis thou'rt gone where bliss is pure, no tarnation of earth's alloy Can mar the crest.

ELONSA A. SKIMMING, Goderich, Jubilee Day.
