GAME OF LAWN TENNIS.

SOMETHING ABOUT "THE NOBLEST OF OUTDOOR GAMES."

Its Strong and Weak Points—Its Popularity—Everybody Can Play It—Courts and Racquets—Tennis Gowns, Hats and Shoes—Its Facilities for Flirtation.

Lawn tennis is an offshoot of the game of tennis, the most famous and difficult of games of ball. It is an adaptation to suit outdoor courts, which are marked out on turf or on smooth ground. It is said to have been invented long ago; but within recent years it has been popularized. It is a game either for two, three or four players. For single handed games the court is twenty-seven feet wide and seventy-eight feet long. The net, which divides it across the middle, is three feet and a half high at the posts which brace it up and three feet at the center. The double court, for three or four handed games, is thirty-six feet wide.

Tennis clubs among persons of leisure exist all over the country. Their members, though by no means all expert players, unite in pronouncing lawn tennis the "grandest and noblest of outdoor games." Why? Because it arouses in the players a lively interest, and is a game at which "everybody can play." Ladies! "Oh, bless you, yes. Some ladies are number one players; but very few, though. But then few ladies are experts in any game. The trouble is they rarely buckle right down to playing a game for all it is worth. They do not educate the eye to be quick. They don't think rapidly, and their muscular movements are not so quick and agile as men's—all for lack of practice, too. And they are less patient in games than men, though in the hard lines of real life their patience ranks first."

STARTING LATE.

"But is it not a game that requires considerable outlay of physical strength?"
"Yes, of course," said the young man who is authority on tennis. "It takes strength as well as some skill to play tennis, and ladies can injure themselves if they don't exercise some judgment; but they can do the same in dancing, rowing, walking, riding—any form of recreation. Four games a day are all the strongest young lady ought to play, and all the sensible one will play."
"If judgment is used is lawn tennis a beneficial game physically?"
"None better. It exercises all the muscles."
"How about the right arm; is it not unduly developed, and isn't there such a thing as a tennis elbow?"

"To be sure. The right arm gets more than its share of development; but so it does straight along through life. And as for the lawn tennis elbow, I will admit it; but it is not unavoidable. Judgment, judgment, judgment, and you will avoid it."

"Where is the game that affords it not? But lawn tennis absorbs your mind too much to admit of sentimental shames while it is going on. Cupid takes a back seat and calmly awaits a more propitious season. Display of athletic grace and ability goes away ahead of the tender passion in tennis."
"Are good players born or made?"
"Born, I think. Certain mental and physical qualities are necessary to good players. There is much in practice, but more in nature. We all know persons who could not be taught to sing in a thousand years."

"Dress?"
"Well, for ladies, something short in the skirt, and not heavy. The rule is, 'a long dress will spoil your play, and the play will spoil your long dress.' Low cut shoes with soles of India rubber, and a small hat are necessary. No bracelets, bangles, or things that get in the way are allowable. Soft felt hats in white, red and blue, in sailor shape, and also high crowns with rolling brims, are much in vogue. Even finger rings are discarded. They raise blisters by contact with the ball."
"Do professionals take up lawn tennis?"
"No; that is probably why it retains its popularity so long. It is eminently a gentlemen's game. Professionals have not degraded it."

OVERHAND SERVICE.

"What is the essential point in learning to play a good game?"
"Learning to tell where the ball will go. It is an instinct that comes of good judgment, quick observation and practice."
"What is a woman's weakest point in playing?"
"Volleying, of course."
"What is the most important thing to do?"
"Never give up. Next is, keep your temper. Patience and determination will often win a game when the skill is on the other side. Last year 450 lawn tennis clubs obtained courts in Prospect park, Brooklyn. This gives an idea of its popularity, since every club which obtains a court there must have a regular organization, with officers, and twelve members."
"What are the specialties of lawn tennis?"
"Guard and attack, as in most games."
"What is understood by the term 'service'?"
"The way you bat the ball. There are three kinds of service, with variations: Overhand service, underhand service, and plain. The overhand is considered the best."

DR. ROSWELL D. HITCHCOCK.

The Late President of the Union Theological Seminary in New York. The name of Dr. Roswell Dwight Hitchcock is conspicuous in the records of biblical learning and theological discussion in New York. President of the Union Theological Seminary in New York city, his sudden death at South Somerset, Mass., will be a shock to a wide circle of friends and the religious public. His death was the result of a cold contracted two days before at the dedication of the Durfee high school building, where he delivered an address.

DR. R. D. HITCHCOCK.

A native of East Machias, Me., Dr. Hitchcock was born Aug. 15, 1817, and was graduated at Amherst college in 1836. He devoted a year to biblical study and teaching, and then studied at the Andover Theological seminary. In 1839 he became a tutor in Amherst college, a position which he held three years, when he returned to his original purpose of entering the Congregational ministry. He preached at Waterville, Me., for some time, and then took charge of the First Congregational church at Exeter, N. H., until 1852, when he became professor of natural and revealed religion at Bowdoin college. On leaving that institution he received from it the degree of D. D., and in 1873 Amherst college conferred that of LL. D. In 1855 he was invited to the Washburn professorship of church history in the Union Theological seminary, and in 1880 he became the president of that institution.

As an author of religious works he is well known. Among his published books are the "Life of Edward Robinson," "Complete Analysis of the Bible" and "Socialism." In connection with Drs. Schaff and Eddy he published "Hymns and Songs of Praise," and assisted Dr. Francis Brown in translating and editing the "Teaching of Twelve Apostles." He was also editor of religious and theological parts of "Johnson's Cyclopaedia," and at one time was assistant editor of "The American Theological Review."

Dr. Hitchcock was something of a traveler. He devoted a year to seeing Germany, visited Italy and Greece in 1860, traveled in Egypt and Palestine, and in 1871 was president of the American Palestine Exploring company. His scholarship was profound, his theological erudition remarkable, and his interest in all the public affairs of life warm to the last. During the war of the rebellion he displayed a fervent patriotism.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TRAVELER.

Daniel Pratt, of Chelsea, Mass., Lately Deceased.

Daniel Pratt was known as "The Great American Traveler," and it is claimed he has been in almost every part of this country in earning the title. There is no doubt he was partially insane, but in a harmless way, and his insanity was not so pronounced but he managed to exist on charity, though a carpenter by trade and able to work. He believed that at various times he had been elected president of the United States, and had a number of explanations as to how he was deposed or why he resigned.

"The Great American Traveler" visited Washington nineteen or twenty times, and claimed to have traveled nearly 250,000 miles. He died recently. He was born at Chelsea, a suburb of Boston, and, aside from his local reputation, will be remembered by college students everywhere, as he had for years made an annual tour of all the eastern colleges. He was a habitue of newspaper offices also, and although he made frequent tours in some of these, from cellar to attic, addressing himself in turn to editors, reporters, compositors and pressmen, he was seldom an unwelcome guest. He made frequent addresses to gatherings of employees in newspaper offices, and never forgot to wind up every fantastic oration with a collection. He seemed to be able to live on almost nothing, and was always dressed shabbily. Some aver that his travels were only in imagination, and that periods of absence from the streets of Boston were really spent in seclusion at Chelsea; but as he disappeared for twelve years at one time, there is little room for doubt that his travels among the Indians, in all the states, territories, in Canada, etc., were really made.

The cut of Pratt is from a photograph by C. F. Conley, of Boston.

Quite American, You Know.
The drivers of the Fifth avenue stages have discarded their winter uniforms—long, closely buttoned coats trimmed with red, and black pot hats—and have assumed their summer garb. The transmigration is complete. Whereas in their clumsy winter garb they were out and out English "coaches," delightful to the eye of the Anglomaniac, in their light, easy summer sack suits of blue flannel, with gilt buttons and broad white straw hats, they are comfortable, every day American stage drivers. The lower terminus of the line at present is on the northeast corner of Fifth avenue and Ninth street, under a patriarchal tree shading the gloomy old fashioned front of a Knickerbocker mansion. The starter sits under the tree and keeps a tally of the coaches in a free and easy American style that is refreshing.—New York Sun.
