

MEDICINES.

"Cheap Drugs
the dearest things on Earth."

The Advantages of Morse's Carbulated Cod Liver Oil.

It is believed that the not infrequent and discouraging failures of plain Cod Liver Oil and other tonic and alterative treatment to cure consumption, grow out of the fact they have no positive power to arrest the decay of the lungs; that while Cod Liver Oil supplies the waste of adipose tissue and vitality that the disease has made, as no other known substance can, it does not exercise any controlling power over the disease itself; it only gives Nature a fair chance to work her own cure. SOMETHING TO ARREST THE DECAY THAT DESTROYS LIFE—some prompt remedial agent that shall act directly upon the disease to check it while the Cod Liver Oil is building up the system. This important addition we have in Morse's Carbulated Cod Liver Oil. The power of Carbolic Acid to arrest decay—something marvelous. The destruction of matter cannot proceed where it is administered. Its disinfectant, purifying and cleansing properties are truly remarkable, and have been of the greatest practical value to medical men. It is palatable, and now put up in bottles adding a full pint. Price, $1. Formula on every label.

We have on hand constantly a fresh and complete stock of DRUGS, FANCY GOODS, PERFUMERY, ETC.

Also all the leading Patent Medicines, and a full stock of Paints, Oils, Etc. Prescriptions carefully dispensed. Good value guaranteed. Favor us with a call.

THE ROMAN EDITOR.

JOURNALISM IN THE LONG AGO—MEN LOOKING FOR GORE.

Incidents of the Early Efforts in the Way of Publishing News—A Difficulty in the Way of Stealing One's Paper—Divisions of the Editor.

Newspaper editing has always been attended with more or less difficulties. The first newspaper of ancient Rome was simply a under-board suspended in some public place, on which the principal events of the day were briefly recorded. We suppose that only regular subscribers were allowed to look at it until late in the day. A man who hadn't poneyed up his subscription was shut out, too.

Later on the news was written on the walls of houses. Subscribers changing their residences were requested to leave word at the office in order that the news of the day might follow them. But it couldn't be forwarded to subscribers going into the country for the summer.

We can imagine the tired editor going his weary rounds at night, with a step-ladder in one hand and a lantern in the other, laboriously writing up his paper on the houses of his subscribers with a piece of chalk. When after inscribing on some house from the exact condition of the money market and a stock report, with a carefully prepared summary of the business of the week, and writing musical and dramatic criticisms, and a column or two of book reviews, besides a long editorial on the Cis Alpine question, together with a lot of humorous paragraphs by way of variety, how disgusted he must have been to discover

THE EDITOR ON HIS NIGHTLY ROUNDS, THAT THE HOUSE WAS EMPTY, HIS SUBSCRIBER HAVING MOVED AWAY THE DAY BEFORE!

The only way of stealing a man's newspaper in those days was by foreclosing a mortgage on his house. Still, people sponged their reading, as they do now when they can. By getting up early in the morning they could read the news of the day, before regular subscribers were out of bed, and no one the wiser for it.

By paying a little extra the editor may have been induced to inscribe the more exciting events of the day on a window shutter, so that it might be removed from its hinges and brought to the breakfast table for the gentleman of the house to digest at leisure with his coffee.

Borrowing a paper to read was unknown in those days, but folks who didn't patronize the editor had a way of dropping around on those who did and learning all the news under the pretense of a friendly call.

"Won't you walk in?" says the master of the house, as he answers the door-bell and discovers a neighbor, Caius Cassius Stiggins.

"No, really," says Cassius, hastily running his eye over the telegraphic headlines, "it is so pleasant outside that it seems like a shame to go into the house." Then he looks to see what corn is selling for in Carthage, and takes in at a glance the quotations for Western Union and the Hannibal line, while he comments upon the weather and asks how the family is coming on.

There were men, doubtless, who thought they knew more about running a newspaper than the editor did, and they sat up late nights waiting for him to come around so that they might give him advice on the subject. And the man who wanted a free puff of his business was haggling around, too. And the chap with a spring poem and the humorist with a new joke that had been chalked on the Roman walls repeatedly before the editor was born.

The fellow who wants to lick the editor

THE MAN WHO WANTED TO WHIP THE EDITOR.

belongs to all countries and to all times. It is rather difficult for him to get at the object of his hate in a modern newspaper office, but think how an editor in ancient Rome was exposed to his fury as he went about his nightly work. If he didn't lie in wait for him around some obscure corner that he was obliged to pass and pounce upon him like a beast of prey, he could wait until he was on the top of his step-ladder absorbed in chalking out the policy of the next administration on the front of a subscriber's house, and then, jerking the ladder from under him have him entirely at his mercy.

Many editors consider their lot a hard one, but let them think of the many difficulties under which one of those old Roman journalists worked and hold their peace.—Texas Sittings.

PRINCESS AND PRELATE.

A Very Touching Incident—Photographing a Group in a Pretty Position.

While the Princess of Wales is not in her religious views strictly orthodox she has always been fond of bible study, which the last few years she has pursued under the guidance of the venerable Bishop of St. Albans. During the last visit of the aged prelate to Sandringham, where he is often an honored guest, he happened one afternoon to be in the conservatory with Her Royal Highness and was in the act of expounding a difficult passage when they were interrupted by the entrance of Colonel Montgomery, an intimate friend of the Prince. The Colonel is an enthusiastic amateur photographer and always on the lookout for a subject. The charming tableau made by the old bishop in his chair and the fair Princess with the holy book in her hand against the background of spreading palm and blossoming rose captivated the intruder, and he begged the privilege of a sitting. The Princess good-naturedly consented on condition that the photographs should be at her disposal. Afterwards she consented that the copyright should be sold for a large sum to be devoted to charity, and a certain per cent. on the sales. The picture has a particular interest, as it is the latest taken of the Princess and the only one showing her at Sandringham Hall.

A Prince's Adultery.

I asked Wilder about his parlor entertainments in Europe, and especially about his evenings with the Prince of Wales.

"I gave my imitation for him six times," said the little man. "The last time I saw him was at Mrs. Sloane Stanley's, and he kindly set me to his right at the table. All stand till he sits, and he rises first at the end as a signal to the others. It is not etiquette to eat after he finishes, but he fixes that very neatly by continuing to pick at the food as long as he sees anybody else busy. He is a man of wonderful tact in placing persons at their ease.

"For instance, I took a sip of water on sitting down. 'That's water,' said the prince, with a laugh, touching my wineglass. 'Ah, sir, I said, 'I am a blur-ribbon man. I never drink any wine.' 'No,' he said, 'very well.' He was polite. He did not quiz me or laugh at or banter me, as another might, and say: 'Aw, now, just this once, you know.' Nothing of the sort. He turned the talk to other things."—Washington Post.

The Difference.

A well-known mining operator who was in Delmonico's last evening was heard to say: "D. O. Mills and James D. Fry, a Californian financier, are owners of a small island off the Alaska coast. The island is rich in free-milling gold ore, and I understand that they are scooping out $25,000 worth a month. Mills and Fry own the island, and are working it for all it is worth, and very quietly, too."

"Is there any stock for sale?" asked a friend.

"Not a dollar's worth. They are the sole owners of the island. People don't issue stock when they have got a good thing all by themselves."

"Suppose the find had not proved to have been as big as expected, would any stock be on the market?"

"Ah! that's another question. I have heard of people who have found a gold mine who did not find any gold but who got rich from stock they sold."—New York World.

A Successful Remedy.

The best medicine writers claim that the successful remedy for nasal catarrh must be at nonirritating, easy of application, and one that will by its own action, reach all the remote sores and ulcerated surfaces. The history of the efforts to treat catarrh during the past few years obliges us to admit that only one remedy has completely met these conditions, and that is Ely's Cream Balm. This safe and pleasant remedy has mastered catarrh as nothing else has ever done, and both physicians and patients freely concede this fact. The more distressing symptoms quickly yield to it.

Get The Best.

To Avoid Baldness or Grey Hair.

Use Dr. Dorenwend's Great German Hair Magic. It keeps the scalp clean and free from dandruff, and promotes the growth of the hair. It prevents premature greyness and stops all falling out of the hair. On bald heads, where the roots have not perished, it will invigorate them and force a new growth of hair. Ask for Hair Magic. It is the only reliable. For sale by J. G. King, A. P. Chown, and all druggists.

In Better Humour Now.

"My son, aged eleven, was cured of an eruptive humor that covered his head and face with sores, by two bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters and Pills," testifies Mrs. Mary Fulford, of Port Hope, Ont.

Like Magic.

"It always acted like magic. I had scarcely ever need to give the second dose of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for summer complaints." Mrs. Walter Govencok, of Ethel, Ont.
