

"Cheap Drugs" are the dearest things "on Earth."

The Advantages of Morse's Carbolated Cod Liver Oil.

It is believed that the not infrequent and discouraging failures of plain Cod Liver Oil and other tonic and alterative treatment to cure consumption, grow out of the fact they have no positive power to arrest the decay of the lungs; that while Cod Liver Oil supplies the waste of adipose tissue and vitality that the disease has made, as no other known substance can, it does not exercise any controlling power over the disease itself; it only gives Nature a fair chance to work her own cure. Something more is wanted—SOMETHING TO ARREST THE DECAY THAT DESTROYS LIFE—some prompt remedial agent that shall act directly upon the disease to check it while the Cod Liver Oil is building up the system. This important addition we have in Morse's Carbolated Cod Liver Oil. The power of Carbolic Acid to arrest decay—something marvellous. The destruction of matter cannot proceed where it is administered. Its disinfectant, purifying and cleansing properties are truly remarkable, and have been of the greatest practical value to medical men. It is palatable, and now put up in bottles holding a full pint. Price, $1. Formula on every label.

We have on hand constantly a fresh and complete stock of DRUGS, FANCY GOODS, PERFUMERY, ETC.

Also all the leading Patent Medicines, and a full stock of Paints, Oils, Etc. Prescriptions carefully dispensed. Good value guaranteed. Favor us with a call.

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS CONCERNING PEOPLE OF NOTE.

An Insight Into the Domestic Life of Great People—A Horrible Traffic in Paris—New York's Great Postal Business—Breaking a Bank, Or Trying To Do So.

John Donaghue, the Boston sculptor, is making a life sized statue of John L. Sullivan.

Queen Victoria is in ecstasies over a new parasol which has just been made for her by a noted London establishment. It is made of cream colored satin, covered with fine Brussels lace, with a carved ivory handle.

Bishop Emery, of the Methodist Episcopal church, wants some colored angels painted in pictures. He says the angels have been painted white long enough. But how does he know that colored people are not white when they get to be angels?

Senator Stanford has bought for $1,400,000 the San Joaquin ranch, near Los Angeles, which contains 108,000 acres and runs along the coast for twenty miles. He is now negotiating for another tract near Pomona, containing 45,000 acres, which will cost him about $2,000,000.

Justice Field, of the United States supreme court, who is now in San Francisco, started the railroad men by refusing to sign his ticket to Portland, and the document was finally issued to him minus his signature. In this case the people have secured a decision of some significance without litigation.

"Blinky" Morgan, the western robber and murderer, was asked the other day how he came to "enter upon a life of crime." "I was born in Philadelphia," he said. "When I was very young I commenced reading dime novels, and read them until my mind was thoroughly poisoned. I thought of all sorts of wild schemes, and when I was 16 I ran away from home and went to Texas."

"Ex-Senator Mahone is like an animated toothpick," says The New York Tribune. "His slender limbs are incased in tight fitting tapering trousers. His boots have heels of the French pattern and fit like kid gloves. He wears a Prince Albert broadcloth coat with skirts of exaggerated length. His crowning bit of apparel is a broad brimmed exceedingly soft felt tile—a sort of Gainsborough hat."

Miss Adelaide Johnson, a Chicago girl, has a modeling studio in the billiard room at Calumet place, Mrs. Logan's home, and is at work on a heroic bust of Gen. Logan. The young artist is a modest, studious girl, but she has a romantic history. Several years ago she fell four stories down the elevator shaft in Music hall, Chicago, and was taken up for dead. Citizens made up a purse for her, and when she recovered she had a few hundred dollars left. With this she went to Rome, and for two years worked hard. She now intends to take her bust of Gen. Logan there next winter and carve it in marble.

W. W. Story, the sculptor, writes from Rome stating that his design for the Grant monument has been misrepresented. His idea is a mausoleum resembling the tomb of Hadrian, one of the most imposing monuments of Rome, but necessarily smaller; a massive circular tower, surmounted by a colonnade, above which rise steps crowned by an equestrian figure of Grant; around whose base he would place "a funeral procession in which all the states, north and south, east and west, might join, and thus make the monument national and not sectional, and within to have a vast sepulchral chamber, in the center of which should be a recumbent figure of Grant, illuminated from above."

Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox's husband, a stockholder of and traveling salesman for the Meriden Britannia company, is on the road a great portion of the time, and since his mother, Mrs. Wilcox, and other members of the family left the city the residence on Colony street has been a lonely residence for the woman made famous by the "Poems of Passion." Besides Meriden has furnished very little for her social amusement, as all her distinguished literary friends came from abroad, and the only wonder is that a woman of such poetic nature and as refined susceptibilities could have contented herself in such a cold, unappreciative place as Meriden so long as she has. Her health is still much impaired, and though it has been decided to vacate the present residence the first of next month, the definite plans for the future have not yet been determined. It is quite probable, however, that when Mr. Wilcox returns from his western trip arrangements will be made to spend the summer at some favorite watering resort. One thing is certain, that the fair poetess will most likely leave Meriden for good and go back to her old Wisconsin home.

If Mr. Gould had only his own tastes to provide for, according to his son, the Atlanta would never have any wines or liquors on board, except what might be included in the medicine chest; neither would there be a cigar. Consideration for his guests and the members of his family who indulge in these luxuries leads to the stocking of the refrigerators with choice liquors and wines of the finest vintage; but Mr. Gould himself does not touch them. It is not because he is a temperance man on principle, but because he does not like them. He tried to learn to smoke once, on the advice of a physician, but gave it up after three cigarettes. He is fond of music, and the evenings aboard the yacht are devoted largely to musical entertainment in the dining saloon. This is large enough to accommodate thirty-two persons comfortably at the tables, and is readily transformed into a parlor by folding the tables together. In one end of the saloon is a piano, built expressly for his yacht. Mr. Gould himself does not perform in any branch of music, but he is a good listener. This applies also to his conversation. Although he is a fluent and interesting talker, he is surpassed by none in the sympathetic attention which he gives to other people's utterances. He never ceases to take pleasure in the subject of his boat.

Trying to Break the Bank.

Two men who have just been arrested by the Paris police had worked out a system with a view to breaking the bank at Monte Carlo. They published a pamphlet, in which they demonstrated to their own satisfaction, and it appears to that of a very large number of dupes, that, if applied, 100,000,000 could be made at roulette in a very short time with a capital of 24,000. Being circulated all over Europe, this pamphlet resulted in its authors receiving thousands of letters, many of which contained money for a trial of the system. Before long they found themselves in possession of 60,000, and proceeded to Monte Carlo to break the bank. Unfortunately for them, their first day's gambling did not end as they had anticipated, for instead of having won 1,000,000, they had lost 24,000. After that experience their faith in the infallibility of their system appears to have been wrecked, for they returned to Paris with the remaining 36,000, and were arrested as common swindlers.—Boston Transcript.

How a Steeple Climber Escaped.

One of the noted characters of Cincinnati, the "steeple climber," died the other night. His name in full was Joseph Rodriguez Weston and nearly thirty years he has been climbing steeples in this city. No point was too high and dizzy for him to reach and maintain his steady foothold. Of late years he would undertake only those difficult feats that appalled others. It was his pardonable boast that he could go as high or higher than any other man. There are many stories of his hazardous exploits in this city. The most notable, probably, was the draping of the cathedral spire on the night following Archbishop Purcell's death. On the ground below were 3,000 or 4,000 people eagerly watching for a glance at the daring man as the lightning flashes revealed him on the dizzy height.

Weston, when only 12 years of age, had placed the tip on the same steeple. Another feat that was talked about at the time was on the night of July 3, 1876. Weston climbed the spire of the Presbyterian church on Fourth street, the tallest in the city, and nailed fast the stars and stripes, 285 feet from the ground. It was on this occasion that he had a narrow escape. Weston had obtained from Michie, the jeweler, a heavy gold chain, the links of which were all solid. His chain, when he was falling, held him for a brief moment, during which the climber succeeded in regaining his hold.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Horrible Traffic at Paris.

A horrible kind of traffic has just been discovered here by the river police. It is customary for the boatmen of the Seine to receive 15 francs for each dead body which they find in the river after they have given due notice of their discovery at the Prefecture of Police. This premium is not paid in the two departments adjoining the Seine, and the Paris boatmen accordingly go down to the rivers and canals in these departments (Seine-et-Oise and Seine-et-Marne), where they retrieve the bodies of drowned people from local river-bank loafers and tow them up to the metropolis. This kind of thing has been going on for some time, and was only brought to light recently by the police and octroi agents, who examine all the boats coming into Paris. The agents had just inspected a boat and were going away when they saw two ropes astern of the craft. These they pulled up and found two dead bodies attached to them. The boatman then admitted that he had paid five francs for each body at Asnières to a man who had found them down the river. The boatmen of the Seine have been frequently taken to task for wrangling with each other over the bodies of persons who have been found drowned in the river within the precincts of the city, but this is the first time that such a remarkable speculation as that described has been recorded of them.—Paris Cor. London Telegraph.

The Free Delivery System.

Superintendent Bates of the free delivery service, post office department, says that the cities of the country are showing great backwardness in calling for the service to which they are entitled under the law passed last winter giving it to towns of ten thousand inhabitants, or to towns whose post office receipts reach $10,000 per year. "Why," he said, "we get letters every day from towns entitled to the service indignantly referring to the fact that we have given the service to rival towns of the same size and neglected them. They will make no application for the service, and we can send no inspectors to the town except upon application. The fact of it is that a large number of these towns don't ask for the service because such a movement is discouraged by the postmaster. He is afraid that if the service is established his box rents will fall off and his income decrease. He is aided by the grocers near the post office, by the dry goods house, and by the man in whose store the post office is kept—all of whom are interested in having the crowd come to the post office for its mail, instead of having it carried to them. As a result citizens groan and complain because a neighboring town gets the service and their own town is neglected by the post office authorities. Towns will get the free delivery system when citizens take it into their own hands to make an application to the department for it."—New York Sun.

Well Preserved Philadelphians.

The Philadelphia Ledger's recapitulation of its local obituary columns for the last six months savors of the Old Testament chapters. It shows that longevity, so to speak, is not dying out in the big town by the Delaware. The mortality announcements of persons who had lived to or beyond the advanced age of eighty years numbered 466, of whom 181 were men and 285 were women. A similar record for the first six months of 1890 contains a total of 448. The demise of four male and four female centenarians is recorded thus far this year. One of these reached the age of 104 and another 105. How many well preserved Philadelphians there may be who are buoyantly scaling their twelfth or thirteenth decade does not appear. But it is comforting to think that the old gentlemen who heard the historic peal of the Liberty Bell is still numerously among us. The statistics likewise show that the Ledger has a clientele old enough to know a good thing when they see it.—N. Y. World.

A Human Heart Clogs a Switch.

"Yes," said Special Officer Frank Hartigan, of the Pennsylvania railroad, "we railroad officers have to look at queer things sometimes and strange occurrences fall to our lot; but the most sickening event I ever experienced was at Thirty-seventh street, Philadelphia. It was a dark night, and I remember well that the leverman in the tower had to call up the station agent to help him move the lever. A dispatch arrived about that time from the depot which stated that a passing train had killed a man at or near the station. Investigation revealed the horrible fact that a man had been killed there and that it was the poor fellow's heart which had fallen into the switch and clogged it so that it was impossible for the leverman in the tower to make the lever work."—West Chester News.
