HOW TO KEEP COOL.

A GREAT DEAL IN HOW PEOPLE HANDLE THEMSELVES.

There is Something in What One Eats And Drinks-The Waste of the Body by Perspiration-The Pores Should Be Kebt Open the Better to Perform the Drainage of the Body.

"Camping must be fashionable," said a young lady to a reporter the other day as the names of many citizens were recalled who were trying to enjoy themselves under distressing circumstances. Then she went on to say : "But I don't think that camp ing can be enjoyable. It may be all very well to sit in a boat under a hot sun and broil, or fight mosquittoes at night and flees in the morning, but I am not aching for it. Kingston is about the best camping place I can find. But let me tell you if the husbands and brothers were more compassionate in the way of demanding hot, red hot, meals in middle of the day, there would be less camping out and less desire to hang about the river's edge and try to keep cool."

The thought as to the grievances of wives and sisters struck the reporter with force and he recalled an article on the very subject which he had recently read. It said that some men will eat corned beef and cabbage in July, if they can get it, and finish off with a piece of mince pie, and perhaps a glass of brandy or other liquors. How such people manage to live as long as they do is a marvel. It only shows what a marvellous strong mechanism the human stomach sometimes is.

The ordinary human being must consult the welfare of his digestive apparatus if he wishes to keep it in good order. Generally, the indications of nature point out the safe way. There is a natural craving in healthy stomachs, at this time of year, for fruits and vegetables, and an instinctive aversion to "strong" food, especially such as is greatly or in any way rich in fatty constituents. But some people get into such cast-iron habits of eating that they would go on devouring the same dishes all the year round if it were possible.

Those who work in hot weather require, of course, some food that is nourishing and strengthening-food that has nitrogenous elements, like lean meats, or albuminous, like eggs, or starchy, like hominy, and rice and peas and beans. Some fat is not injurious, and may even be necessary; but there is enough of the fatty matter in milk -real milk, of course-and in butter and in other ordinary articles of consumption, to supply incidentally all that is necessary without taking fat meat.

The principal waste of the body in hot weather is in perspiration. The amount of moisture that exudes through the pores of the skin is marvellous, and it is easy to see that this waste must be met by taking inwardly what will make it good. Now most fruits and vegetables are sure to consist mainly of water, and they supply, better than anything else, the moisture that is needed. The acid of the fruits, too, is a wholesome corrective to the liver, and their well-known aperient quality is another virtue. A man might very well subsist in the summer on bread, milk and fruit, the bread and milk supplying the starchy and nitrogenous and fatty elements necessary, and the fruit the extra moisture and the needed acid.

The fact that so much moisture passes through the pores of the skin suggests another point that it is very essential to bear in mind, at this time of the year especially. It is evident that if the pores are to perform their duty of drainage thoroughly and effectively they must be kept open. Frequent bathing and rubbing of the skin is, therefore, an absolute necessity.

The crowds that infest all bar-rooms and collect around all soda fountains are suffi cient evidence that men desire cooling drinks. The frequent applications of many of these customers suggest, also, that the drinks are not cooling for any length of time. The truth is that most so-called cooling drinks are a delusion and a snare. If they have any "rum" in them they are sure to do more heating than cooling. Differ as people may about alcohol and its poisonous properties, it is certain that it heats the blood and especially has a tendency to affect the head. The more cocktails or "sours," or gin and seltzers that a man imbibes, the hotter and thirstier he gets. Even beer, although the bitter taste of it is more satisfying to the thirst, is not cooling. The 4 to 8 per cent, of alcohol in it is more than enough to produce heat and affect the head.

Very cold iced "soft drinks," too, are not satisfactory. They chill the stomach violently, and may produce a harmful shock. The same is true of ice-water. Water that is cool is far more satisfying and more thirstquenching than that which is ice-cold. To sum up, then, if you want to be healthy in summer, and as comfortable as possible,

First-Don't drink anything alcoholic. Second-Don't take ice-water and iced drinks in profusion. Third-Don't eat fat, greasy or rich food.

Feurth-Do keep clean.

Fifth-Do cat plenty of vegetables and

Sixth-Do, if you need much nourishing food, take it in the form of farinaceous dishes, peas, beans, lean meats, bread and

If these directions are followed you will feel better, and consequently be less affected by the heat than if you should take indiscriminately whatever struck your fancy at the moment.

A DASH FOR LIBERTY.

A Convict Seeks to Escape But is Quickly Hunted Down by the Guards.

Yesterday afternoon a convict named Mc-Phillips outside the penitentiary made a bold dash for liberty. For some time he has been entrusted to conduct a car used for drawing stone from the quarries to the penitentiary. He had a good opportunity to escape and took advantage of it. He had been preparing for the venture. At hand he had a pair of overalls and a blue smock. Into these he jumped in a hurry and dashed for Dr. Betta'. He did not get a long lead on the guards. They missed him a very few minutes after his departure and gave chase.
As soon as McPhillips discovered he was being tracked he quickened his pace. On reaching Williamsville he asked a man living there to shelter him. This was refused and the convict passed on. He ran to Law's rope walk, jumped through a window and ran along the building emerging at the opposite end of it. Then he started towards the city. By this time the guards were close apon him. He leaped over a fence surround ing Mrs. Hentig's premises and concealed himself in a shed. Here he surrendered to Keeper Bryson and his companions and was driven to the prison. He had $5 wherever he got it and wanted to treat the guards, but they would not accept his hospitality. He gave as his reason for escaping that he had heard that his mother was sick and he wanted to see her. He came from Ottawa and was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary for horse stealing. He has only fourteen months to serve. THE MAUD'S own excursion to-morrow.

The Toronto brick-makers' union has voted $1,000 towards the striking carpenters. There are over fifty members in the women's assembly of the knights of labour in this city.

Belleville water works workmen are still on strike. They want a uniform wage of $1.50 per day with no dockage.

The Way Belleville Wants the Games to Be " Played—Not Accepted.

That town wants the lion's share of the series, the best dates and the biggest amount of gate receipts. Then it joins all the games into a month, giving the Kingston clubs little chance to play between times. Altogether the bay city is too hoggish.

AMERICAN GIRL'S FOLLY.

ENGAGED TO A MAN WHO COM-MITS MURDER IN PARIS.

His Object to Get Money to Carry Him to America-She is the Daughter of a New York Banker-And Happily Her Name Is Unknown.

PRANZINI.

London, July 29.-A curious sequel of the Praizine trial is reported from Paris. Praizine's lawyer affirmed that the murderer spent the evening of the murder with a lady of position, whose name and honor prevented him from publishing it. Thereupon a gang of sixteen persons formed a plan for levying blackmail on two ladies under the threat of divulging the names of one of them as that of the lady in question. The affair got into the hands of the police, and they are now all in custody.

The Murderer's Career.

Pranzini occupies a condemned cell in the La Roquette prison. After his incarceration the police discovered that he was a professional blackmailer. He used to make love to them, get them in his power, and compromise them if they refused to pay. The correspondence among his baggage included letters from women of all classes of society, and showed that he committed murder, for which he will die. for the purpose of obtaining sufficient meney to go to the United States and marry a rich New York banker's daughter, whose letters show that she had been betrayed. She was deeply infatuated with the murderer and anxious to marry him. Their acquaintance began in Paris last fall. Happily the name of this imprudent girl has not been made public.

On March 17th last a sensation was caused in Paris by the discovery of three dead bodies in a handsome flat of the Rue Montaigne, leading off the Champs Elysee. The victims were Mlle. Marie Regnault, a demimondaine, her maid and the latter's little ten-year-old daughter, the godehild of Mlle. Regnault. They had all been knifed in the most scientific manner. A few days later Pranzini was arrested at Marseilles with some of the jewels of the dead bonne in his possession. His trial was daily attended by many of the most fashionable mondaines and demi mondaines of Paris. Before the jury retired Pranzini shouted: "Give me death or give me liberty. I am innocent." The jury returned a verdict of guilty as to the murder of Marie Regnault and her servant, but found that the killing of the girl was unpremeditated. Prantini was then sentenced to death.

He was born of Italian parents in 1856 at Alexandria, Egypt. At the age of eighteen he obtained employment at Cairo in the post office. In 1879 he was discharged for stealing the contents of letters, and sentenced to a year's imprisonment. When he left prison he became the business agent at Cairo of several important houses of business at Alexandria. After holding this engagement awhile he left Egypt for a time, loiter ing about the various Turkish ports on the Mediterranean. He finally made his way to Odessa, where he entered the service of the late General Skobeleff as courier. Sent by the general to accompany his mother on her journey from Bulgaria to Russia he disappeared from the scene simultaneously with the old lady's mysterious murder by the general's aide-de-camp, and made use of the large sum of money which he had in his possession, and which was evidently part of the proceeds of the murdered lady's jewels, to secure a passage for Calcutta, where for a time he lived in affluence. His money, however, did not last him long, and, having become proficient in the Hindoo language, he then secured employment as interpreter to a party of merchants, with whom he travelled through India and a portion of Afghanistan. Returning to Europe with his employers we next find him interpreter at a hotel at Constantinople, and subsequently at the Hotel Royal des Etrangers at Naples, where, however, he got into trouble for stealing bank notes from a letter addressed to a guest. His next post was that of 'a conductor of the sleeping-car company on the trains running between Calais and Brindisi. He was discharged after a few months' service for stealing the diamonds of a lady travelling in his car. In 1884 he returned to Egypt and accompanied Lord Wolsdey's expedition to the Soudan as interpreter, at the close of which he received a certificate signed by the proper authority to the effect that he spoke with equal facility English, French, Italian, Greek, Turkish, Arabic, Russian and Hindoo. Subsequently he was employed as clerk at one of the principal hotels at Marseilles; he disappeared one day with the proceeds of a large check which he had been requested to cash, and made his way to Paris, where he devoted himself exclusively to the profession of blackmailer and hanger on of fast women. His personal appearance was of great service to him in this peculiar calling. He was above the average stature of Frenchmen, had coal black hair, a carefully trimmed beard, and exceedingly small and delicately formed hands. His manner was quiet and somewhat effeminate. The figure of the murderer is significant of his possession of extraor-

At the ex-piration of that period Dyson expects to be given command of the Belleville corps again. But he will 'play no more ball. A Horse on a Caper.

A horse attached to Lewis Bros. delivery waggon ran away this morning. The waggon was badly injured before the horse was stopped.

The body of a man, apparently about 25 years of age, was found near Port Colborne yesterday. He could not be identified. He had a smooth face and a scar on his right arm.
