Beranger's Lines "To the Students."

From the London Examiner.

Poor children! What? Your fancy is not o'er That still for Freedom you may swell the And 'neath the flappings of the Tricolor Honor the man, who bade it live again ! Some luckless lays of mine among you live-

Forget them now! I have renounced them If this their creed, I'd curse the fame they give. Ah! pardon the poor singer and his song.

And the past days I fondly used to sing?

who ne'er ceased to lash in every word Flatt'rer and flunkey, Emperor, Pope, and terest. If a great soldier won my lays erewhile, Brumaire was punished by that lonely Isle. Ah! pardon the poor singer and his song.

Say, must Nisard for me be clear and bright? And Leverrier old Arago efface?

Am I the friend of silence and of night? Must Belmontet supply my Hugo's place? Lastly-my God -so clement, so benign-Is He the God through spies and gaolers

Is He the God of Rome's sword-guarded shrine? Ah! pardon the poor singer and his song. Yes! I have sung those epic ' Frocks of Blue,"

Bare with the wear and tear that Victory True sons of a Republic bold and true, Battling for twenty years 'gainst banded

But the trim soldier who now guards us here, To gain a step, who'd slay us, right or wrong, | Herces. Is He my lad who danced and pledged his dear Ah! pardon the poor singer and his song.

To Poland and to noble Italy France owes a debt of blood to either land : The cannons groan-on! on! Ah! toolish cry! assorted. The ground is all so slippery close at hand. Come! larther off. let us plant Freedom's tree, Ay, by main force, if need, the Turks among, Ped with pride your grand alliance see. A or pardon the poor singer and his song.

PROCLAMATION By the Right Worshipful the Grand Master British North America, Joun Flanigan,
