They may utter words more cutting than sharp knives; they may do things more stunning in their effects on the victim than the blows of pokers and hammers; they may kill their wives by a process of slow torture-unkindness, infidelity, whatever shape it may assumeand society will forgive them. They are not guilty of what is recognised as an assault, because they only assail the affections-only lacerate the heart. They speak with horror of the "brutal wretches" who inflict on women blows, less painful at the time, and less abiding in their effects. But is their treatment of women any better than that of these ruffians? Have they any higher sense of what is due to womanhood? They would not besmear a fair face with blood; but they would set a tender heart a bleeding until it can bleed no more. They would not mar the beauty of God's handiwork; but they would soil the purity of a virgin soul. And here is a terrible and true accusa-

There are various forms of man's cruel-ty to woman, of which wife-beating, we are afraid, is not the worst. To seduce, betray and desert a young and beautiful woman in the first freshness and innocence of youth-to leave her to die slowly of hunger, disease, or gin, or suddenly, by a leap, on a cold winter's night, from the parapet of a bridge spanning the I hames, is to do what must be done amongst us on much larger scale than wife-beating, else whence all these evidences of the "great sin of great cities?" And it is to do it quietly and deliberately, under no irresistible provocation, and with none of those attendant excuses or palliations which are not unfairly pleaded on behalf of the poor, turally and necessarily followed by a bru- Pirce 2d. talized manhood.
