In the first place, it had been shown out the "platform" which he so cordially enthat Dr Clarke labored under a disease which the Rev. Mr Wilkinson of Lobo, met at The verdict rendered was, in a large degree, the oilomania. A very small quantity of stimulants taken by a person laboring under this disease, was sufficient to affect them in a way that a man in health would not be affected, and paroxysms or attacks were followed by great depression of spirits, and a desire either to make away with themselves or commit some desperate act towards others. It was clear, from the evidence, that such had been, unfortunately, the result in DrClarke's case. He (the Coroner) knew um in order to obtain relief. When these remedies failed, he had, no doubt, had recourse to a glass of liquor, which would temporarily relieve him, but terminate in great depression o spirits. His conversation on the day of his death showed clearly that he was not in his right mind. The statements, for instance that he was going to take charge of a nunnery, that he was going to his brothers', and that he had not received his pay. As respected the latter astertion, he (the Coroner) was informed that on that very day Mr Brent had gone down to the Hospital for the purpose of paying him and the other servants their month's salary, and he refused to take his.

The jury returned a verdict that the deceased came by his death from the effects of a
