A PRUSSIAN SPY.

The New York World, a French organ, reports the trial of a Prussian spy by court martial in Paris. There were no witnesses against him, the story unocently remarks; but the military officers who captured him had forwarded documents affirming that the man had sent two letters to Berlin, and worse than that, that he possessed minute knowledge of the country. When put upon ! trial he acknowledged having written etters as any tourist would write; denied having made any confessions; and explained his presence at Gion, the place at which he was taken, by saying that he went Stoves, Tinware and General thither for money due him. " Upon nearing this statement," the ingenuous narrative concludes, "the Imperial Commissary demanded a sentence of guilty. with the punishment of death.
