Among the singular cases which have England lately is that of Mr. Vaire Milbanke, a young gentleman and spendthrift of twenty-two. Although scarcely out of his teens he had managed to pile up habilities to the time of $150,000, and being unable to discharge them sought relief after the manner of insolvent traders. Mr. Milbanke, it appears, will be entitled on the death of the Dake of Cleveland whose dukedom will then be extinct, property worth $70,000 a year, and on the death of his father to estates of the value of $500,000 a year.
