B. MACPHERSON & CO'S., of his opinions, "Jennerite" informs the public that he published an "article" in the London Lancet, four years ago, in which his theories regarding the contagion of small-pox are "set forth." The only literary emanation from Kingston, in the small-pex line, that has come under my House or Industry Concert. - We observation, as appearing in the Lancet beg to remind our readers of the Concert for the past five years, is a statement rela- Fancy Goods & Toys. in aid of the House of Industry on Fri- tive to a "beautiful young lady" who had day evening in the City Hall. Come early and making great progress. Among the many words in which they have been clouded. Temperance organizations in existence the are these. Mr. Allen asserted that the contagion of small-pox was wafted to a progress. A new lodge was opened on distance. "Jennerite" denied this. Let Dr. Watson, of Lenden, speak on the subject. I quote him, because there must be many copies of his "Lectures" in Kingst m, as these lectures formed the Texttea-meetings and social gatherings. attention to this subject, not a single instance had occurred to prove that persons liable to small-pax could associate in the same chamber with a patient in the distemper, without receiving the infection. It is readily communicated in every way by innoculation, by breathing a contagious atmosphere, and by femites. Nay, it may be caught from the dead body. Mr. Casar Hawkins has recorded an interesting example of this. The bedy of a man who had died of small-pox was brought into the dissecting room in Windmill Street . and four students took the disease from that source. Of these only one had touched the body." I trust, then, that "Jennerite" will, for ence, attempt to conquer his innate modesty, and thus relieve the anxiety of the citizens of Kingston in relation to this matter. No "professional reason" should scare him from coming before the public at so critical a time-knowing, as he must, that the opinion of a person whose lucubratiens regarding small-pox were deemed by the Lancet worthy to be placed against those of Dr. Watson, must be considered of the very greatest value by the denizens of this Limestone City.
