Automatic Telegraphy.

Mr. D. H. Craig announces that the new system of automatic telegraphy, on which he has been engaged for several years, is finished and in practical operation. By this operation in is claimed that it is eatirely feasible to telegraphy, and receives in clear, distinct characters fifteen hunhim, and it was night, and the star was dred words per minute between Washing of Morse line circuits; and that by the use of a certain kind of automatic repeater, messages can be sent any number of thought that he did not belong to earth dred words per minute. The matter to be sent by this new system is prepared by means of perforating machines, the use of which can easily be learned by any person of ordinary intelligence in ten days' time. These perforating machines can turn out the messages ready for automatic transmission at the rate of from one hundred to one hundred and forty words a minute. If the new system will really accomplish what Mr. Craig claims for it, it is an invention second in importance only to the discovery of the electric te egraph itself.
