I am not rich in gold or lands, My home no splendid palace stands. But with the labor of my hands earn my daily bread. No liveried servants round me wait. can not ride in pomp and state Among the titled and the great ; A humble path I tread.

And yet a heritage I hold I'd not exchange for all their gold, And sounding names, and wealth untold Their houses and their lands. I have a free and kingly mind That greed or gold can never bind-An eye that pride shall never blind To duty's high demands.

L have a soul with leve imbued For all the human brotherhood, Confessing ever, "God is good!" Unwavering faith in Heaven; A faithful compass by my side, A chart that still shall be my guide, When widely o'er the raging tide

My bark is tempest-driven.

I have a lyre that gently flings Sweet music from its trembling strings, And stirs the spirit's hidden springs To kindly melody. And friendly hands are clasped in mine, And starry eyes upon me shine, The while Love's dainty fingers twine A reseate wreath for me.

A DIABOLICAL PLAN. - At New York. on Wednesday afternoon, a deliberate and elaborate attempt to reb the Wall Street bankers was made by a "clique" of thieves. and fire bugs, who lighted fires in two different buildings just at the busy hour of a quarter-past two, when 'deliveries are being made, and when the brokers' boxes are open, and bends and stocks are in transitu from office to office, or lying loose upon the desks. The detectives and the police "tumbled" to the "game" at ence, and warned the brokers, so that there was a hasty barricading of deors by clerks to prevent the expected invasion. One broker had a hundred dellar bill snatched from his hand on the street, but beyond this capture, the thieves, some fifty of whom were counted on the street during the excitement, went up town empty-

A comical twin story is reported from Dublin. A barber was waited upon one morning by a nice young gentleman, who desired the hairdresser's lowest terms per week for keeping his comely "caput" in condition. A moderate sum was named and accepted. Thereafter the now customer appeared regularly every day for a "close shave," with frequent additions shampooning and hair-cutting, and often twice aday. In short, the barber marvel led at the rapidity with which this young man's beard and hair grew, and the myswas only solved after a considerable lapse of time, when one day "two of him" came into the shop at once for a shave. The original customer who made the bargain had a twin brother so exactly like him in personal appearance that "one couldn't tell t'other from which," and the two had been getting the attentions of the tonsor for the price paid for one. -An exchange says Mr. Jones, of Oshkosh, heard it intimated on the street the other day that he was henpecked. He went home and thrashed his wife, tore up two or three of her best dresses, opened the doors and windows in the house, and sat down in the parlor with his feet on the centre-table, among a choice selection of choice books, and smoked his pipe. He thinks the world is convinced now that he is boss of that house.
