REVIVAL DAYS.

The cold earth yields to Spring's embrace As down the hills The streams and rills To gladsome measures overflow.

Black to their haunts the birds return, Already weary of their flight; A countless throng, Whose pecund sing Makes the weeld echo with delight.

All underground the fairies work. Their ma ic wonders to disclose And, all unseen, Of rambow sheen They mould the hily and the rose.

The skies are beautiful and fair :

E'en hearts confess A tenderness. And quicken in the balm air. Blow soft, we breezes! smile, thou sun

And let thy life restoring rays, Bid nature glow, And gladly show How blessek are earth's revival days.

O heart of mine ' be glad, nor feel That death or sin can bind the fast ; If Christ be near, Thou needest not fear. His smalle will set thee free at last !

Where grace its dawning hour delays; thir fetters break, Our hearts awake With greetings for revival days.

> ----A Customs Anomaly.

The London correspondent of the Manchester time interm write as follows .- A few evenings since aince a well-known West end silk and velvet merchant arriv. ed at Charing-cross, having come by the express service from Paris, and having with him two dresses of most costly character, worth, indeed, £150 each, which were to be worn by a lady at an entertainment that night. The importance of the commission and the urgency of the occasion had induced the merchant to make the journey, and his case, as in many oth ers, what was thought to be the best proved to be the worst thing that could have been done. He knew that there was no article of the description he had with him. out he knew that there was a certain red tape routine to be followed. To his dismay, when he had reached port and the train had stopped under the roof of Charing cross terminus, a custom-house officer informed him that as the boxes he had with him contained merchandise they must be passed through the Queen's warehouse in | pper Thames-street, and should not have been broug it by passenger train at all. Explian tons were of no use, o fers to pay any amount of duty were of ne avail, the boxes were impounded and were conveyed to the Queen's warehouse, 25 cents per box. whence they were released two days afterwards.
