Thirty years ago, a child three years o'd, belonging to a family named Richard, was, as it was believed, lost, having strayed from the residence of its parents on Richardson street, St. Roch Suburbs, Quebec. Some two weeks since, a gentleman from the Ancient Capital entered the shop of a hatter named Richmond in this city and was struck by the resemblance of the proprietor to the Richard family; questioning him, he learned that he had been brought up by a squaw, who on her death bed, infermed him that she had stolen him when a child at Quebec : forgetting the name of his family, she called him Richmond. The young man hastened to Quebec, but his enquiries based on the slight clue afforded him to discover his relatives were unavailing and he came to this city. His visitor struck with his story, wrote to his mother, who learning that birth-marks he bore on his person corresponded with her description. hurried to this city, and recognized him by this means as her long lost and long
