A Carpet Story.

Mark Twain writes to the Herald that when Buckingham Palace was being fitted up as a house for the Shah, one of the chief rooms was adorned with a reacarpet which had been designed and manus factured especially to charm the eye of his Majesty. The story goes on to say that a comple of the Persian suite came here a week ago to see that all things were in readiness and nothing overlooked, and that when they reached that particular room and glanced at the lovely combination of green figures and white ones in that carpet, they gathered their robes ; carefully up about their knees and then went elaborately tiptoeing about the floor with the aspect and anxiety of a couple of cats hunting for dry ground in a wet country, and they stepped only on the white figures, and almost fainted whenever they came near touching a green one. It is said that the explanation is hammedans, and green being a color sacred to the descendants of the Prophet, and none of these people being so descended, it would be dreadful profanation for them to defile the holy color with their feet. And the general result of it all was that the carpet had to be taken
