I love a anaiden young and fair. Wit thowing beas of sanny hair; With eyes that beam like stars at night, And taugh that ripples a it's delight, -Her figure graceful as the vine, And foot that - I must decline, And simply, truly, say of her, She's the Leatest thing in lavender.

I think of her by day and night : It fills my heart with strange delight, When parting at the garden gate, With steps as light as fairy queen, -Or zephyr the leaflets stir This nextest thing in lavender.

She is not like those silly things, Just loose from mother's apron strings, Who think it is the best of fun, To flirt with every mother's son, And bring some suitor to their feet. Their yows of love with scorn to treat No mile game is love to her. This nestest thing in lavender.

I hate those silly romping girls, Who think of naught but bows and curls; of play and party, ball and rout, Of or quet sprees, or driving out : But posted up in all the lore, Of Beames, traings - nothing more. Past none can this of her aver. This neatest thing in lavender.

She knows exactly to a dot. A home should be a hallow'd spot, -A place secure from worldly care, With love's endearments reigning there, And all the joys that sweeten life. Free from contention, turnoil, strife-A queen, by love's right reigning there, This nentest thing in lavender. Well single blessedness to me.

Is not just what it's said to be :

I've had my share of that, and row

Have made a selemn earnest row, -
