A SONG OF PROVERBS.

In ancient days, tradition says. When knowledge was much stinted When few could teach, and rewer preach. And books were not thus printed What wise menthought, by prudence taught They pithily exponimen ;

in every mouth abounded. O blessing on the men of yore, Who wisdom thus augmented, And left a store of easy fore For human use invented.

Two of a trade, 'twas early said, Do very ill agree, air ; A beggar halts at rich man's gates A beggar's face to see, air, Yet trades tilere are, though rather rare,

Two lawyers know the coal to blow. Just like a pair of bellows. Birds of a feather flock together, Like fain with like would dwell, sir, Yet things unlike the fancy strike, And answer pretty well, sir. You know Jack Sprat, le eat no fat, His wife could eat no lean, sir;

Where men are not so jealous

So 'twixt the two, with small ado, They licked the platter clean, sir. The man who would Charybdis shun. Must take a cautious movement, Or elee he'll into Scylla run-Which would be no improvement. The fish that left the frying pan, On feeling that desire, sir,

Made hitle by their change of plan, When floundering in the fire, sir. A man of sense, from a glass house, Will not be throwing stones, sir, a mountain may bring forth a mouse, With many throes and greams, sir A friend in need is a friend indeed,

Are off, and o'er the sca, sir. Sour grapes, we cry, of things too high, Which gives our mide relief, sir; Between two stools the bones of fools, Are apt to come to grief, sir; Truth, some felks tell, hes in a well, Though why, I ne'er could see, sir
