THE SCIENCE OF LOVE.

(From the College Journal.)

Miss Seraphina Cokett speaks: gracious, who ever heard of such a thing ! Why, the fellow - for of course it's a man -only a man would ever dream of such nonsense -- the fellow must be crazy Scienc , indeed! If he had said 'Love as an art,' one might have had some idea of what he meant; for it does need some skill to keep those horrid men either from making one lock so ridiculous by their abaurd attentions before everybodyeverybody, no matter who it may be who is looking on, and when one doesn't want CEALED TENDERS will be received at the office of the Warden of the to keep them from doing this, or from becoming spiteful, and just to vent their spleen, going over to some horrid old w man, who is forty at least, if she is a day -well, thirty five or thirty. There's F-(well never mind who !) because I just hinted that he needn't have the whole he did ! Actually went away to that horrid old thing, Miss --- who is such a fright, such an animated skeleton. Oh . I can't bear the very look of her. But,

However the loss turns out to be profit. For the other self (which is infinitely more precious) loses itself in your self, is appropriated by you, and elevates you into the extremity of blessedness. Love is the losing of self in another self.

taelf outwardly, in some form or other, or rend asunder the heart of its victim. The strength of the feeling, however, is sequently vary; and the form and expres takes. Sometimes it manifests itself in the manner stated by the lover in Tenny- age, may become effete for the next, and comstances, obstacles intervene. Then the sun is eclipsed, and the world is left in darkness. Thus, the parents of the adored one may refuse, from mere utilitarian motives, to abet the "the religion of young hearts"; and love being refused the proper nourishment, shews itself in the dejected behaviour of the visage, and the suspiration of forced breath; the forlorn lover finds no rest, steals out in the darkness, finds out a well-known house, (the casket that enshrines his jowei), before which he wanders up and down with unwearied tread : stopping at times to gaze wistfully at the light in an upper room. which perhaps (Oh, blissful thought!) Acr presence consecrates. From this it appears that a dissolution of the apparently perfect unity of soul with soul is possible. This is more evident when the teeling is all on the one side. There have been cases, it is said, in which the love-sick swain has poured forth his innermost feelings in passionate eloquence, and found out that the object of his affections regarded him as a fool for his pains. She was not to be caught by chaff like that; how should she, when he had only eight hundred dollars a year, which wouldn't permit of her going anywhere, or visiting anybody, or even pavi... the milliner's bill! And so, the rejected lover has gone away, disconsolate and disenchanted, to creep, like a wounded hare, into some obscure spot, and feeling that henceforth life had no pleasure for him, that the future was a bleak and dreary waste, and that his only consolation was that he would soon go down to the silent tomb. The breach, however, may come from the other side. The youth, with incipient love coiled up in his heart and only making its presence obscurely felt by slight stirrings and vague strivings after some unknown felicity, naturally invests the first fair maiden he sees with a glory and a beauty, beside which an unfallen angel would be plain and commonplace. Bu when, after the first fresh blush of feeling has passed off, he begins to see more clearly the doubts as to the correctness of his first view insensibly shape themselves in his mind, in spite of his attempt to throw them off; when these doubts at last take the definite form of conviction, and he discovers that the supposed divin-gradually recede from the once-admired one's side, and that he should seek an exact equivalent for his vanished love in its money-value, as decided in the case of "Deceive va. Deceiver." Love, then, has a tendency to break up, and thus destroy that reciprocity which is its essence. This being so, I may not be out of place to suggest that the is usually called, is not always a safe one, and that it may be doubted whether very grave consideration be not required, on both sides, before the final leap is taken. celebrated writer has gone so far as to say that the true basis of wedded-bliss is not love, but mutual esteem, as the former will grow up afterwards. Without going me far, it may be said that the ex-reise of a little reason will not do any

We suspect, however, that advice is of little or no use in the present instance. The Lawyer and the Lover resemble each other very closely. The one takes a case in hand, and then looks about for argument by which it may be made at least plausible. The other is smutten by the charms of some fair damsel, and afterwards proceeds to convince himself that she has all the highest graces, accomplishments, tastes and viriue under the sun. The love is a genuine wizard-another Prospero; he has but to wave his wand (of imagination,) and a spotless human apirit stands before him, so dazzlingly bright as to blind the eyes of his reason, to strike him down prostrate and lull him into the mystic slumber of a blissful infatuation, through which he is heard to

R. WHEELER'S ELXIR OF PHOSphates and Calisaya - after having used your Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya for over two years in mydwily practice, I must give it my unqualified approbation. During a practice of over taenty years, I have used many scientifically prepared compounds, made to fulni the same therapeutical indications as your elixir, but none of them proved with me as valuadle as yours. To the medical profession, and to the public, I would e-pecially recommend it as the best remedy with which I am acquainted for the successful treatment of the laege and constantly increasing clave of cases of over-worked and nerve-exhausted women.
