Those who are fond of pet canines should be coreful to cultivate the uniform good will of Fido, or run the risk of dying of hydrophobia. English scientific men have came to the conclusion that the bite of a perfectly healty dog may result in hydrophobia, and cite numerous cases to justify this belief.

The Halifax Chronicle and several other journals of the Maritime Provinces are clamoring for a union of these province as the best available means for lessening the expenses of legislation. The necessarily limited resources of the provinces and the growing demands for defraying the cost of public affairs seem to convince these organs that some other and less cumbersome system is required.
