SKIPPER'S SONG.

A death on the Ocean Wave.

And a grave in the rolling deep. For the skipper whose owners save
On a foreign crew.dirt-cheap!
I've Freach, Dutch, Turk, and Greek,
Swede, Fin and Portugee—
And all the lingues they speak
Are heathen Greek to me!

And a grave in the rolling deep.
When I'm knived nor knocked on the head

Some night, when no watch I keep.

Like stuck pigs we shall die, With no time to say our prayers, And no chance to exchange Good-bye. For a death on the Ocean Wave, And a grave in the rolling deep, Is the skipper's whose owners save

On a foreign crew, dirt-cheap! CORRECTION.

To the Editor of the British Whig. DEAR SIR, -I perceive by your paper last night that you report the man James Hurst, who was injured by the falling of Dolan's building the night of the are, to be under the care of Dr. Sullivan. The facts are these. Immediately after the receipt of the injury the man was taken across to Dr. Dupuis surgery where he was stripped, washed, and provided with a clean shirt, his wounds properly attended to, and his condition made as withstanding he was worn out by worktill after six o'clock in the morning, comfortably in bed. Dr. Dupuis, for aught I know, has aftended him ever since, and reports him in a fair way to recover.

Yours traly,

then accompanied him home and saw him
