PLEASANT INCIDENT. - There is hope even for Boston, so long as it contains such an unselfish spirit as that of a young lady, living opposite a small hospital. She discovered that two invalid women took great pleasure in looking into the lighted sitting room of her house and viewing the pleasant family life there, and were sorry when the shades shut out their sight. From that time the shades were left up until the hospital patients were in bed, and the poor women had the comfort of looking at the pretty home pantomime, which, perhaps reminded them sweetly, though sadly, of brighter days in their lives. It was a little thing, but it belonged to the "cup itself a beautiful incident.
