Without the least fear of being contradicted or their deception exposed they are at liberty to indulge in almost any amount of self-glorification. That this freedom is employed to good advantage may be taken for granted; and thus the "reaction" is, according to the Bolleville Intelligencer, a reality and not a fiction. Exactly.

Mr. Cameron told the "Liberal Conservatives" of Catherines that when he outered Parliament in 1861, he did so an independent member, but hed grav toted towards S'- John and Toryism "because he believed he had not a me tive er a feeling that was not full of love for his fellow-men, and a desire to advance their interests." The idea of Mr. M. C. Cameron ever laying claim to anything like independence in political views must have amused some who were familiar with his antecedents.
