London, Dec. 25 - Nothing is more certain than the fact that England within the memory of the oldest inhabitant was never more prepared for war than she is at this moment; and in the present temper of the nation, it is equally certain that a compara-CIRCULATED tively small thing would harry us into action. An incident which a year ago might have been disregarded would now be taken seriously to heart. A trifling act of public disrespect to our flag, an outbreak of Russian arrogance, which even weeks ago would not have moved us, would not push the nation into hostilities; for it is beginning to dawn upon all classes that England has been sold and that the Czar has not the remotest in tention of fulfilling those selemn undertakings which he made when he declared war against Turkey. During the conference at Constantinople the Turks told England that, no matter what the Sultan might do, no by intrigue; they had been dubbed "sick," NEW RAISINS, "effete, and they knew that their hour had establish it. Bismarck is reported to have may be called the sick woman." Once this matter what diplomatic sacrifices the Em pire was prepared to make, Russia meant war. The Turks knew their time to fight had come. They had been 'prodded' with arrived to lose their power or to confirm and said, "It Turkey is the sick man, England idea gets rubbed into the English mind, once a European power flings that practically in the British face, it is war. Conscious of her sacrifices for peace, England has not lost her national pride, and once roused, she is a fighting nation. Since the days when she last / declared war against Russia, I remember nothing so ominous as the present state of affairs. It is true, there is a good deal of division among the people; it is true there are some who would rather tight for the Russians than the Turks; but a great deal of that mock sentiment which Mr Glad. stone and his "t. James' Hall friends fostered for a time has died out; and Russia has only to do some outrageous act to falsity Russophile hopes and discredit their faith Abounds with all the latest local and foreign to bring them shoulder to shoulder with news. Beaconsfield has been accustomed to "wait" all his life, and in this business he has "waited" until a Cabinet, previously "all sixes and sevens" has become a united hody. Ministerial discussions are no more a public topic. Even Lord Salisbury is no longer at variance with his colleagues. The Ministry is at one, and its policy is settled. Beaconsfield has not forced his colleagues. He has waited for the developmen of events. They have agreed upon their course of action. It is not Beaconsfield who has decided, it is the Government; and the Ministry is prepared to go to the country for the approval of the national voice upon their conduct? In my last letter I gave you a sketch of the Woolwich arsenal. Since dispatched it orders have been received for the immediate completion of the four 80 ton guns for the Inflexible, and during the week, in response to Government commands, a number of field guns, 38 tens guns, and large quantities of stores have been shipped for Malta, whither vast quantities of material have been forwarded during the last two months. Two hundred thousand pairs of mulitary boots have been ordered at North. ampton, the seat of the boot and shoe trade of England. A large body of men recently discharged at Chatham dock-yard have been taken on again. A friend of mine who visit. ed Portsmouth yesterday tells ne that the war feeling there is strengthened by the increased activity in the transport service. It PURE FRUIT. But these shallow hirelings of a monarchical press who count the enforced coldiers of the Continent, and then hurl IN FIVE POUND BUCKETS, XEAT their figures at a free people, forget the lessons of history -forget what volunteers have done in the wars of the world. It does not seem to occur to our Continental critics that should England be drawn into this war she would light as an Assatic power and that she has already used native India troops away from their own country, thus overcoming a prejudice long thought to have NEW HOMINY. power over the native mind. If England had ; no other ally than Turkey, and were pressed into a rupture with Russia, Germany and Austria combined, she could put in motion a power as the world has never seen. Not only could she shut up the trade of the three Emperors with her fleets, she could give to Turkey an to paralyze the united forces of all her European foes, while the least disaster thing to find thoughtful Englishmen who believe that Great Britain is to be put on her trial as roughly as Turkey, and if she has |. to fight, she will find it necessary to exert

It is not an uncommon all her strength, not simply as a European but as an Asiatic power. Victoria would not only draw the sword as Queen of England, but as the Empress of India, the ruler of 180,000,000 of Asiatres, whose Government was never more popular than at this moment. The recent tour of the Prince of Wales through the Empire, the homage of all the princes and chief, the strengthening of the English power, not only in her forts but in the hearts of the and the lavish contribution of her wealth, sent from every city, town and village of threat Britain to alleviate the late famine, have served to consolidate the respect and affection of the aubject of the A war in defence of Constantinople would make India ring with shouts of joy, and bring to the British banners, if required, not thousands, but millions, of troops who would fight for their faith and British gold.
