The Black Cap of the Judge.

It is popularly supposed that the black cap is assumed by a judge only in passing sentence of death. It is, however, a per tion of ordinary judical costume, and is worn on many occasions. It is an emof course, of the judge's great judigial dignity and importance, he being entitled to be covered, even on the most solemn circumstances, and in the presence of the Sovereign herself. It is worn when in presence of the Sovereign, at her coronation, and in her courts. The writer well remembers the surprise and almost amusement exhibited by Queen Victoria when, visiting the Court of Exchequer, with the late Prince Consort, many years since, all five barons solemnly put on their black caps, and remained thus covered until her departure. The Lord Mayor of London must feel a peculiar sensation when appearing on the 9th of November, first in the Exchequer Division, to be "sworn in," and afterwards in the Queen's Bench and Common Pleas Division, to invite the judges to assume their caps upon his entrance into court, and rare excellence to all classes of the only remove them when he departs. It NEW RAISINS, was formerly the custom to put on the cap as soon as the sheriff's chaplain commenced his Assize sermon at the circuit town, and to wear it until the discourse to have his black cap when wearing his scarlet robes; formerly it was tucked into was ended. The late Baron Alderson was the last judge who observed this formality. It is etiquette for a judge always the judical girdle; it is now invariably carried in the hand. When the judges attended at the funeral of William IV. at midnight in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, there were grevious complaints next morning of gouty and rheumatic pains the sages of the law experienced through kneeling during part of the service on the cold marble floor. The late Mr Justice Maule congratulated himself on having knelt on his folded black cap, and upon so having, by his prudent conduct, escaped all ill-effects. In olden times the Lord Chief Justices always were their black caps when robed, the puisne judges being covered with their coifs alone. A good illustration of this is given in the well-known and beautiful engraving of Mary Bunyan (at the judge's lodgings, Bedford) interceding for her husband. Lord Chief Justice Hale wears his cap, and his brother judge his coif alone. need scarcely add that the most solemn occasion when the black cap is assumed is whilst passing sentence of death. Immediately after the clerk of the Crown has "called upon the prisoner" to know "why judgment of death should not be passed on him to die according to law," the judge solemnly places the cap uponhis wig, and proceeds with his sad duty.

School Festival at Lake Opinicon.

M R Lazier.

The teacher of the Union School Section, Mr Bamford, aided by a few friends, gave an entertainment on Friday evening, the 4th instant, to his pupils, and which, netwithstanding the snowstorm on that day, was well attended by the scholars, and exmembers (only one child being absent), and also by the parents and others, the schoolhouse being crowded. Of course the usual Christmas tree was there, beautifully illuminated and leaded with a profusion of presents from Santa Claus for the scholars. T school room was very neatly decorated for the occasion, and the singing, reading and dialogues by the children exceedingly well done, and they were then liberally supplied with cake and fruit; nor were the elderly portion of the assembly omitted as bon bons, tea, &c. were plentifully furnished to all. After which the distribution of prizes - the result of the recent examination-took place, each recipient being called forward by Santa Claus and suitably addressed. No exceptions were made by Mr Bamford.
