The speaker strongly inveighed against the time of the Churches being occupied by questions of hymns and organs, of the quantity of water used in baptism, whether a handful, a hogshead or a river, of the different manners of celebrating the Lord's Supper, and other minor differences. The Church was rent asunder by such questions, and more time was spent on them than was spent on the question of Grace. On the platform of the Alliance was most every form of Church doctrine. It developed light, love and life in the Christian men who belong to it. There was nothing better than the drawing together of men of different opinions regarding any manner. He himself liked to meet a man who differed with him, and did not care a straw for one who always said "Yea, yea" to any proposition which he advanced.
