The sixth and seventh chapters of Acts contained all there was said of him and he was then a full grown man, one of the first deacons of the Church. He was an eloquent Annual meeting of the Frontenac Loan preacher and pointed out the character of the persecuting Jews, so that all the fury of their nature was stirred up. For this he was stoned to death, and passed to the cloudless, sorrowless land. But there was this said of him which gave the key to his character, "He was a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost." The various names applied in derision to great and good men were then referred to, to show that persecution was not an indication that men were not deserving. Without conjecture, it might be back yard on Princess street. said that Stephen had a noble purpose, and it was a purpose of a nobler nature than that of the mental student, the statesman, or the wordling, to set forth the Divinity of Christ and to raise men to the image of the Divine. By gazing at the character of has gone to Montreal to attend a bankrupt the good, they might become so imbued with their spirit that their mantles might fall upon them. Unfaltering courage was another feature of Stephen's character, and like Daniel he stood undaunted before the human lions. Though persecution did not now opone-third of the regular price. They are pose the Church, yet the sterility of the human heart made it difficult to lead a religious life. Scorn and jealously still opposed the religious professor. He urged them to stand up for their faith, and impurity would blush in their presence. Stephen's unawerving allegiance to the Word of God was then referred to. The Word of God was the pillar of his belief. This sword of the spirit did duty in the hands of Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer. Negligence of Scripture was rebuked by Stephen's acquaintance with it.

A glance was then taken at the forgivingness f this man's character. In spirit he was meek, though he had cause for resentment, in that he was stoned without cause, and he imitated his Divine Model in breathing out forgiveness with his dying breath. The last trait in this beautiful character noticed was that he was a man of prayer. The grace of supplication seemed to have been the last that was given, and the last that trembled on his dying lips. They must be men of prayer if they would succeed in Christian work. Prayer made every place a divine place, and assimilated man's nature to the nature of Him with whom he communes. And passing from this man's character to his departure, there were many features to be admired. To paint the scene of his death was beyond the power of imagination. The sun was most beautiful just before its setting, and though perhaps the most perfect picture nature has to offer us, it is but a poor type of the beauty of the dying scene of this martyr.

St. Patrick's Day Concert.

The annual concert in connection with the celebration of St. Patrick's Day, which has been a leading feature in the proceedings of the Kingston Societies for many years, came off last (Monday) night at the City Hall, which was completely filled by a delighted audience. The programe was of a very high class, and with one exception was fully carried out. It opened with an overture on the piano by Mr Oldham, which consisted of a selection of Irish airs. Miss Bates then sang "Dermott Asthore," in good voice, receiving a very hearty encore, to which she kindly responded by singing "Thady H Manilla. O'Flynn." Mrs Bates played the accompaniment. Mr C.
