I am not now discuss ing the points of the Dunkin Act other than to say they were thought not equal to the necessities of those who urged the value and advantage of probibition. Very great objection was urged against what was known as the five gallon clause. I may say shortly without going further into detail, the prohibition clause is for the absolute probibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in the particular county or city subject to these conditions or qualifications, that is unless when sold for a medicine, or for sacramental purposes. In those cases, it is incumbent on the party who is defined as a druggist, or licenced vendor, who has authority to sell for these special purposes, on receiving a certificate, if from a doctor, that the liquor is specially required for the person named in the certifi cate, if for sacramental purposes, on certificate of a clergyman, affirming that it is required for any scientific on the certificate of the applicant, with an affirmation, and corroborated by the testimony of two justices of the peace.
