TRUMPETER'S HORSE.

NO MORE NEED TO CONSULT AN the trumpeter's horse,

It was at the end of September, 1864, that I arrived at Paris from Baden, intending only to remain four and twenty hours. Interest moderate

I made the round of all the norse-dealers of the Champs Elysees, where I was shown a collection of screws, the average price in a cloud of dust. Gradually, as it cleared a way, I saw a little carriage approaching money upon such useless beasts. It was Wednesday, the day of Cheri's autumn sale; I went to the Rue de Ponthieu, and lady, who drove it, with a small groom in the seat behind.

The next morning I left for La Roche Targe, and the following day my horses arrived. My first care was for Brutus. This grey horse had been running for the last forty eight hours in my head, and I was anxious to try his pace, and see what he was good for. He had long teeth and every mark of a respectable age, a powerful shouldergand he carried his head well; but what I admired most in Brutus was the way in which he looked at me, following every movement with his attentive, intelligent, inquisitive eye. Even my words seemed to interest him, he leaned his head to one side as if to hear me, and when I had finished speaking replied with a merry neigh. The other seven horses were brought up to me in succession, but they resembled any other horses, and Brutus certainly was different from them all. I was anxious to take a ride in the country, in order to make his

I was about to turn homeward, satisfied with the talent of Brutus, when a shot was heard a distance off. It was one of my keepers firing at a rabbit, for which shot be it said, en passant, he afterward received a handsome present from my wife. I was then exactly in the centre of an open space where six long green roads meet. On hearing the shot Brutus stopped short, and put his ears forward in an attitude of attention. I was surprised to see him so impressionable. After the brilliant military education I assumed he had received in his youth, he must be I pressed my knees against him to make him move on, but Brutus would not stir.
