The Perth Road.

"A Traveller" continues his correspondence with the Whig relative to the state of the Perth Road and exhibits his ignorance as to its condition. He professes to have travelled over the Perth Road frequently (we presume) and does not know Mr Walker the Superintendent. Does any one think that possible? He speaks of the road as a "company road." The road is not a company road. He speaks of the road "yielding the company some $3,000 or $4,000 a year," when as a matter of fact it never "yielded" the proprietors the fourth of that amount. We have been over the road since "A Traveller's" trip, and find that his lucubrations are a gross exaggeration. A a matter of fact the road is in as good a state as any other road in the county at this sea son of the year. There are certainly some rough spots, which will be attended to at an early day, as there are over fifty toise of stone broken and ready to spread upon the road. "A Traveller" appears not only ignorant of the facts, but his insinuations are wide
