Legal Grubbings.

This was the title of a paper read at the Young Men's Christian Association meeting last evening by Mr R. V. Rogers, Barrister. The paper was an exceedingly interesting one, being the result of that gentleman's researches into old and obsolete laws. Amongst curious marriage laws he noticed the ducking stool, the muzzle, and a Welsh law which al-Lanigan made the arrest, most of the articles, on this subject among the Hindoos. He next being recovered. She pleaded guilty and was gave some examples of curious wills, some of which were noted for their length and Odyssey to be written on the parchment. Another, a gentleman left to each of his daughters their weight in one-pound bank notes, the elder received $51,200, the with too. rounger £57,344. Laws in regard to dress then passed under review, such as that of the reign of Henry VIII., when the number of yards in a dress was fixed by statute, and that of Elizabeth when more than a yard and three-quarters of cloth was forbidden to be used in making a pair of stockings. Food was also a subject of law. Cranmer ordained that there should not be more than three blackbirds in an ordinary pie, though a Weathersby troupe at the City Hall to bishop might have four and an archbishop six. were referred to, and then the old criminal laws received a share of attention, the principal of which was that of the ordeal by fire or by water, swimming witches, bringing persons accused of murder into the presence of the murdered corpse, when it was supposed the blood would flow afresh from the wounds, and many other superstitious oustoms were in vogue. The trial by battle was also described, the different modes o swearing, the peculiar service to be rendered for rent of land, strange cases decided by the ourt of Chancery, and in conclusion an amusing instance in which a man was brought before a California Court for disturb ing the services by his peculiar habit

> The lecture was much appreciated. The meeting was closed in the usual manner.

the House, for the purpose of bringing before it several cases in which members of the Civil Service were doing election work in the Province of Quebec.

Mr Jones (Halifax) rejoined to find that gentlemen opposite were converted to the views of the Liberal party. When they were in power they allowed their officials to take part in elections many long years heard the principles of the Liberal party, but when they come into power all they could say was, "You're another." Officers of the House had been allowed to go to Quebec to take part in the elections and were now absent from their duties. This was intolerable, and he held that the Speaker of the House was responsable in a large measure for the absence of their officers, and, until his (Sir John's) statement was demed, he would hold to the view that the Speaker knew of intended mission of these officers when they applied

Mr Huntington said the only question was whether the public service suffered by the absence of the officers referred to, and no one would say that it did.
