It is an amusing sight to see a Goorkha setting forth from a station for a day's sport in the neighbourhood. Liressed in some cast of European mufti which he has purchased in the bazaar, he carries either an ancient fowling-piece or a razed Brown Bess, while at his heels follow two or three ours of very low degree, whose ears and tails have been artistically docked. Yet, bizarre as looks his get-up, the little fellow generally manages to bring home a decent bag, unless, indeed, his weapoon burst at the first discharge. His method is VICWS Of Residences, &c., either to stalk the game, be it a dove or a likely spot. Between whiles he puffs his sophisticated ears. Although a right merry lad is the Goorkha in quarters, and held in high esteem by the European soldiers. But his greatest talent lies in fighting to the death for the side whose salt he eats. Some years ago, during one of our expeditions into the Poshawar hills, a Goorkha detachment was skirmishing with the Afredees. On the recall being sounded, three or four men who had taken up favourable positions declined to come back. There they remained, leisure-
