It was but a comparatively short time since that it was unlawful to build dwelling houses on the sea shore on account of the fishing. But it had since been found out that the island was fitted for other purposes. There was no doubt, however, that the fisheries were the principal means of wealth on the island, and great fortunes were made at them. There was the deep for money from the congregation, but he at 4,95; 100 fancy at 4,40; 100 do at 4,50; lasting six weeks or two months. Then the these they had a mine of exhaustless wealth. Then they had mining industries of various kinds, which were yielding immense wealth. In some parts of Newfoundland were immense beds of minerals, and as an instance of the wealth obtained from the mines, the speaker said that one man had last year cleared £3,000 sterling, while this year he expected to double it.
