PRINCESS LOUISE. Her Prominence in Charitable Work.

Princess Louise (wife of the new Gov (ernor-General) in her new position, will be able to continue those good works to which she has so well accustomed hersel in this country, and she will be able to show, as the Princess Royal and the Princess Alice have already done, what a Princess can do to influence the well being of the people over whom she called to preside. Princess Louise will be missed in England. She is patroness, not many charitable movements in England, and of so many societies who intention it is to help forward the education of women, that her absence will be a real loss. vigorous, and giving in every lineament and action the impression of power, physical and intellectual. His abundant bair and large beard are grey, almost white but somehow this does not give so much the appearance of age as maturity. He is endowed by nature with one of those ample foreheads for which most eminent men have to thank the kindly artists who immoralize them on canvass, and his bushy hair flung back from its white circumferonce, the result is a cortain leonine expression very appropriate for a British Ambassador. He is under the medium only in name but in act and work, of so broad shoulders and a well-knit frame, for which fatigue must have no terror. The Indianapolis Scutinel relates that a little girl, the daughter of a repectable grecer of that city, went with several of her playmates, the other day, to the corner of a neighbouring street to see a procession pass, The girl was the possessor of an abundant supply of beautiful golden hair. While occupied in viewing the procession she felt some one handling her hair, which had been disappear in the crowd with her hair, which he had cut off close to her head. The feelings of the mother can be fancied when her little girl came home crying with her head shorn of her golden locks.
