iMy Mother's Voice.

I hear it not; the voice is hushed ! Cold death the treasure bath. No more her presence ! rightens mile-Her form hath left my path,

My mother's voice was soft and slow, And noiseless did she tread When I in torturing pain did lie Upon my weary bed.

Her gentle words calmed me to sleep, Her soft hand cooled my brow ; But ah ! her voice I hear no more. Where is my mother now?

Her face in dreams I see again, But sweeter than of yore ; It shines with everlasting light Upon the golden shore.

In every path I tread below I fancy her still near, To guard me with a mother's care While I am walking here. But still e'en now her voice doth guide

In life's rough path my feet ;

Her words are treasured in my heart, So loving, true, and sweet, Dear mother ! 'mid the heavenly throng Thy voice is heard in praise Of Him who brought thee to that land

To live through endless days, And I will join that choir, too-Thy voice with mine shall blend in singing ever with the saints
