THE LEGEND OF ST. ANDREW

Hero, brother Sonts, we most to-night, ome two-three hours to put to flight, To hear about St. Andrew wight And elorious days of yote 1 Se sure it's not for want of song ; for we can find these days among Good steries in galore.

And thinking o'er these stories good Of how the Scots their fees withstood, And gave for Home their dearest blood.
What brave old memories rise Of how brave Wallace quelled his foes, tif how The Bruce in strength armo, To free their country from its woos, And rule it firm and wise.

A story rises to my mind-And braver tale you will not find ; I'll tell it if you are inclined To listen how St. Andrew, Pwas in the days of "Auld Lang Sync, Then Scotin's loss tried hard to twine Their chains on her and make her pine With their vile slavery. of which she had just felt the painbetermined to be free again, . She fought with bravery.

The foce came on in legious strong. And swept the heath-clad plains along, and made the cetter's gladsome song mguish they did reel.

Resolved on being free. Chased far from the abodes of men, here they could breathe free air again, And live from easy in peace. ometimes they would make a raid on than foes, who were betrayed pression strong and stronger grew, ntil it seemed that very few Had hearts at all, and those men true Were nearly in afright. at length, resolved to de or die, They issued forth their strength to try, And raised to heaven their battle-cry, "St Andrew for the right."

tey met their foes - a little band, ho looked as if they could not stand The brunt of battle for the land Of liberty and fame. he very heavens against them fought; ie elements made them distraught, The victory would be dearly bought To whomsoo'er it came.

The for outnumbered them by far, and better knew the art of war. It seemed as if old Scotia's star Was humbled in the dust. On they came in legious strong ; The battle raged both fierce and long, And Scotland, her own hills among, Was likely to be lost.

int anddenly the heavens cleared, And in the open sky appeared A sign which all the nations feared-Twas St. Andrew's Cross. This signal gave the Scots good heart ; Clave their courage a fresh start,

And spreading far their foes apart, Drove them back like dross. A voice from heaven cheered them on ; They heard the voice; they fought - they won And ere had set the evening ann

The country was set free. Though many after that had tried To conquer it, they were defied-St. Amdrew a Cross on every side Was call to liberty.

This is the story I've been told; It never falls on heart too cold ; Where'er we meet him, there behold That every Scottish man true. tio where we will -seek him at home Or far across the ocean's foam, Or though on desert plains he roam,

Will venerate St. Andrew. St. Andrew's Day, 1871.
