An exhibit of the receipts and expenditures of the Erie Railway from 1865 to 1872, shows a deficit of fifty-one million dollars. Since Jay Gould had an interest in the road the contingencies have increased from thirty-two thousand dollars to two hundred thousand dollars; the expenses of the general superin tendent have increased from one hundred and thirteen thousand to one hundred and seventy thousand dollars. The issue of stock has in creased from twenty-five millions to eightysix millions, of which sum fifty-one million dollars is covered up in same unknown way on the books. The expenses for agents and clerks have increased from six hundred thou sand to one million seven hundred thousand dollars. There is an increase of over four hundred thousand dollars for conductors, baggage and brakesmen, and a proportionate increase for engineers and firemen.
