UNITY AMONG CHURCHMEN. The following are extracts from a speech delivered by the Rev. J. C. Ryle at a re-

He thought rather that an Evangelical, and no party men, Godly men. all nations to decide whether, when belli, and using the same Liturgy, and yet saily gerents have been reconciled and become estranged and separated from one and other. The present question was, whether a great-

or degree of unity could be obtained among

In the first place, then, if they wanted to btain more unity among Churchmen, they must cultivate the habit of recognising the grace of God and love to Christ, wherever that grace and love were to be found. "The proofs that a Christian might be very wron in doctrine while thoroughly right in heart were clear, plain, and unmistakeable. Who could fail to see that before Crucifixion the apostles were most imperfeet, and their views of Christ's Atonement very obscure? Look at Martin Lather and They all held stoutly the unscrip Jansenius erred in many points; yet, who would dare to say they were not good men ? It never would no to brand people as unof justification. Firmly as they might ching to their own views on such subject Mr Gladstone said he was sorry he was they must carefully remember that it was possible to hold the Head and stand on the Rock under a great cloud of error They must steadily school themselves to hold the principle that such a state of things was part of the mysterious economy of grace. What good would all that do the cause of unity? "It would teach them the habit o schools of thought, even while they disagreed with them. How could they refuse to respect men who were washed in the same blood, heirs of the same kingdom, travellers on the same road, servants of the same Master, though they might think Viscount Bury rose to a question of pri- them terribly mistaken? "They should cultivate the habit of speakng charitably and courteously of those who sagreed with them. They should never scold, nor rail, nor revile, when a hard school of Churchmen, which only belonged in reality, to a few individuals, when at Evangelical Churchmen were held up to scorn, as Zuinglian; when all Ritualists were called Jesuits and liars; when all Broad Churchmen were called Neologians when all who held Baptismal Regeneration. were called Papists; when sweeping language of that kind was indiscriminate used, without remembering St. Jude's advice Of some have compassion, making a difference. In his judgement it did great harm. He admitted it was very hard to draw the right line. There must needs be controversy, but the more lovingly they conducted it the more likely they were to win opponents to their views. Of course, they wanted no man to be always compl ry, flattering, smooth-tongued, and bring. penses of coronation, journeys of the they did need to remind themselves that Queen, building and repairing of palaces, the Holy Ghost said 'Grievous words stir court ceremonies, allowances to trumpeters, up anger,' The words of Matthew Henry watermen, marshals and chamberlains, and to a young minister were weighty and for services of the royal yachts for ten wise :- Be not censorious; widen not y years, and, finally, returns of incomes from differences; judge charitably of all : praise
