THE SHE EPICURE.
(London Truth.)
When honest Mr. Peter Jerring proposed for the hand of pretty Barbara Mills, the young lady father, a stiff, careworn man cleared his throat and said:

"My dear Peter, if I were selling a horse you would expect me to inform you of any defects it might have, but you do not do so."

"It would be very kind of you to do so," answered Peter Jerring, civilly.

"I don't know what you mean, but I don't care to be troubled with your horse."

"I have remarked that Miss Mills has a good appetite, but I rather like to see that she has a good appetite."

"I don't know what you mean, but I don't care to be troubled with your horse."
