From all accounts the police of Toronto will have their hands full some time to come if their purpose is to make thorough work of the big job they have undertaken. The Toronto press is deserving of praise for waking up the morality against the vice which, let alone for long, is sure to become rampant in all large cities. What may be said of Toronto is also true of smaller places, al though of course to a less extent; and the same vigilance should be employed to suppress the same nuisance wherever it may show its hideous form, and wherever its noxious stench pollutes with its presence the atmosphere of the public morals.
