It may be law, but it certainly is not equity, that Government employees should be exempt from civic taxation. Prior to their appointment each of these gentlemen paid his assessment of taxation as a matter of course. Not one of them will say that obtaining his present position did not better his condition. Had it not been a financial "lift" or promotion there would not have been the eagerness to get it. Not one of them is less unable, on account of any personal sacrifice he has made in becom ing a servant of the public, to pay his taxes than he was before. either can it be urged that they do not fully particitate in and enjoy the benefits and privileges in which the taxes are expend ed. From either standpoint, then, it is not only intensely selfish, but very unfair, to claim exemption. As reasonably well paid servants of the public they should be willing to pay their part of local taxation in common with other citizens. It is, in fact, or ought to be, huminating to ask the mechanics and la boring men of Kingston to pay their taxes for them. And yet this is precisely what their exemption will amount to, for taking the burden of takation completely off the shoulders of a favoured few will ultimately increase the burden of the less fortunate many. We will war rant that many an efficient set of gentlemen could be obtained to fill the places these officials now occupy, and be cheerfully content to pay their due share of and persisted in her objection it would taxation out of the comfortable salaries have seriously impaired and imperilled attached to the position. It is a fact which cannot have escaped sovereign the world has ever seen 'a true the notice of candid Couservatives themselves that although there was such usparity in numbers when the recent vote took place in the House on Mr. Blake's Pacific Bailway motion there was nothing to indicate that difference in the debate which preceded it. On the contrary the advantage of oratorical power and argument lay very largely with the Opposition. It is drawing it mild and doing the Ministerialists more than justice to say that in the above respects the magnificent speeca of the Hon. Mr. Blake himself more than outweighed the combined afforts of all the Conservative participants in the debate, and that the able addresses of the other Liberal menibers served to augment the argumentative advantage of the Opposition. The fact arone not only from the incidental circumstance that upon the particular ques tion in hand, the long end of the lever was in the hands of the Liberals, thus giving them a decided advantage althrough the discussion, but that man for man the ranks of the Opposition contain an absolutely larger number of effective debaters. According to the relative strength of the two parties in the House the ministerial party should formsh two or three times the amount of debating taleut as their opponent. So far from this being so, however, the Opposition the not only hold its own in this regard, but san actually outdo the Government party in the discussion of any question which is of can be submitted for parliamentary consideration. THE QUEEN AND THE PREMIER.

Herald's sensational rumour that Queen had offered an affront to Lord Hartington on the occasion of a recent interview the Detroit News pays the fol lowing tribute to Her Majesty : "But even if Queen Victoria were personally not a fool, but, on the contrary, the most sensible Sovereign England has she has shown in a higher sense than any sovereign the world has ever seen a keen appreciation of her position as a con stitutional Queen, who, to use the landoes not govern, and who never attempts to impose her personal opinion, or even only is the whole of this excerpt literally and historically true, but the closing clause of it proves to be a bit prophecy which was rewarded with speedy fulfilment. It has long been known that there was "no love lost" between the Queen and Mr. Gladstone There were many reasons why she should prefer a Premier like Beaconsfield, who, We wonder if it has occurred to the with stately oriental servility, has made her preferences to her Tory Prime Mininter. Whether we have correctly guessed the reasons or not certain it is that she did so, and that she felt con siderable personal repugnance to Gladstore's reaccession to the premiership Apart from all this it was her constitu tional duty to send, not for Gladstone who was, so far as she was supposed know, simply a private member of parliament although an ex-Premier. In accordance with time-honored usage, therefore, Her Majesty summoned Lord Har tington to form the new ministry under his own leadership. So far no objection was shown to or slight reflected upon, Gladstone. The Queen's dislike to ac cept the latter as her Prime Minister became apparent in the long interview which the matter was debated between herself and Lord Hartington; and especially in her suggestion as a final compromise that a peerage should be the recognition of his recent triumph at the But all this while the vaices of the people was demanding that Gladstone should be Prime Minister, and Her Majesty had the good taste and the good sense to surrender her personal objections at the joint representations of Earl Granville and Lord Hartington, and to send her summous to the great popular leader in order to entrust to his hands the formation of the new Cabinet. Thus t turns out in this exciting crisis to be literally true of Her Majesty that she has not "imposed her personal preferences upon the people of whom she is the con stitutional sovereign. With all respect to popular sentiment, there is not a town in Canada in which so little attraction is given to the agricultural interests of the surrounding country as in Kingston. If the railroad brings in lumber and iron ore, it is about all that is looked for. The agricultural interests of the country were better cared for twenty five years ago than now, and that was the palmy day of the old Midland District, Kingstonians then took stock in macadamised roads, every one of which was intrinsically a profitable investment, and would have paid good dividends but for jobbery and stupidity. National Currency Question Bank Charters Rush of Business, etc.

The Minister of Justice introduced Bill to authorize the making of certain in vestigations under oath, which it was explained merely empowered the Departments to enquire as defined into the conduct and actions of subordinates. Sir Leonard Tilley moved the House into Committee of the Whole upon the resolution providing for the increase of Dominion notes from twelve to twenty millions of dollars, with a basis of fifteen per cent, in gold and ten per cent, in Deminion securities. The Government had in their hands £600,000 sterling of the four per cents floated in 1878, which it was proposed to utilize as security. In proof that no danger need be anticipated because of the smallness of the gold basis, it was claimed that although the circulation was nearly thirteen millions of dollars last year the Receiver-General was only called upon to redeem in gold $1,600,000. It was proposed to only issue four millions of dillars this year, and a similiar sum next year. To assist in distributing this aum the Government contemplated paying the Indians their annuities in Do minion bills, and to make all payments of less than $5 by banks payable in Dominion bills.
