Lester's law office and engaged him to write her husband a letter, asking an interview with him to see whether they could not arrange matters so that he, Captain Yott, would support or contribute to the support of their children, who lived with the O'Hearn-Yott combination. Mrs. Yott claims, we are told, that she and her husband separated four years ago at Kingston, she taking two of the children, and that the captain now lives with a woman to whom, she understands, he is married. The captain, upon his arrival here yesterday, proceeded to H. C. Benedict's office for advice. He claims, we are informed, that he is not married to the woman with whom he lives, though he lives with her as his wife. Mrs. Yott's associations here are not of the highest moral reputation.
