COMING CELEBRATION. TRIP OF PRINCE LEOPOLD AND PRINCESS LOUISE.—ARRIVAL BY TRAIN.—PARADE DOWN THE RIVER.—A MODEST PARTY.

An enormous impression was made by the telegraphic announcement yesterday that Prince Leopold, Prince Louise and suite had taken passage at Toronto by Royal Mail Steamer "Spartan." Such indeed had been the intention, but at the last moment the royal travellers concluded to continue the journey eastward by Grand Trunk R.R. as far as this city.

As early as 3 o'clock the St. Lawrence wharf was visited by some whose anxiety to see the distinguished tourists would not let them sleep, but whose early arrival did not benefit them any. The morning air was clear and balmy, the water placid, and in the far distance the movements of the steamer's paddles could be distinctly heard.

The Mayor stated that the 14th Battalion would parade on Friday evening, and the celebration might be more favourably considered. The military should certainly be provided with refreshments. The Secretary intimated that if $20 were appropriated the Montreal Lacrosse Club would visit and play a match with the local Club.

The Treasurer (Mr. Barnford) stated that last year's gross receipts were $1,103.60, of which the City Council appropriated $300, minus the amount required for the payment of special commutes. The expenditure was $1,103.00.

The financial aspect of the celebration was then freely discussed, the general opinion being that the Council should make a liberal grant, as much as in 1878 if not more. It was considered inexpedient to proceed further until the Council should have taken action on the communication now before Finance Committee, asking, we believe, for $400.

Robbery of goods. On Saturday morning last, about one o'clock, Mrs. Halligan, who lives in the upper portion of the building known as the Shakespeare House, heard a footstep to the hall outside her bedroom. At the same time she saw a light under the door. She arose to ascertain the meaning of these things. She encountered a man with a candle and asked him what he was about. He said he had missed his key, and he believed him, thinking that he had been leaving the saloon by the Clarence street entrance, and had walked in the wrong direction to make his exit from the building.

His Highness were plainly and modestly attired and their movements were as quietly conducted as possible. The wharf was occupied by a large number when the party was transferred from the train to the steamer. Through the crowd the royal procession passed, H.R.H. Prince Leopold quickly noticed and acknowledging the wish of the spectators to do them honor by graciously raising his hat several times. As the boat left the harbour their Highnesses took up a position on the deck outside the cabin, the Princess pointing to places within view which had been memorable on her first visit to the city.

HANDFORD SCANDAL. FULLER DETAILS OF THE RAVINE INCIDENT.—AN UNFORTUNATE PROCEEDING.

The Toronto Telegram publishes a long and full account of the whole affair. An interview with the gentleman who saw the occurrence in the ravine drew out the following recital: "On Wednesday of last week, at about 11 a.m. I was walking along Howard street in an easterly direction, intending to turn to the left and proceed down the Drummond road across the ravine to Rosedale, and just as I reached Parliament street I noticed a lady and gentleman walking leisurely along the east side of Parliament street, close to the cemetery fence. I thought the gentleman looked very much like Rev. Mr. Handford, and having heard of the charges recently made against him I examined more closely and discovered that my opinion was correct—that it was in reality Mr. Handford. I crossed the road, and as I reached the entrance way to the ravine, I turned and saw Mr. Handford leave the lady and hurry towards me. I was walking at an ordinary pace, but thinking that Mr. Handford might wish to ask me for information as to the vicinity I listened on the way.

"I did not see any attempt to attract their attention. "I did not, but I stood in the open highway in full view, and if the couple had not been greatly pre-occupied they could easily have seen me. They were standing down in the low shrubbery and underbrush, and I could only see as far down as their waists. Mr. Handford was standing with his back to me, his hat on the back of his head, his arms clasped about his neck or shoulder, and she was facing him, looking up affectionately in his face.

"How long a time intervened between the time you saw them at the gap and when you saw them in among the shrubbery as you described? "Not more than thirty seconds, as I ran from the third to the second curve as fast as I could. The couple stood in the position I have explained probably about a minute or more, as I could judge and then sank silently out of sight.

"I stood at the gap for about two minutes, not knowing whether it was best to go down the ravine or leave the couple in their present position, but finally decided on the latter course, and proceeded across the bridge to the north of the ravine. "Is there a shadow of a doubt on your mind as to who the gentleman was? "No, I am sure of it. I have seen Mr. Handford before, and could not possibly be mistaken.

A special meeting of the dozens of Bond street Congregational church was held last evening for the purpose of discussing the question of the Rev. Mr. Handford's relationship towards his congregation. There was a large attendance. The following letter was read from the Rev. Mr. Handford: "My Dear Friends,—After careful and anxious thought, I have come to the conclusion that my usefulness as the pastor of Bond street church is at an end. I therefore beg to be relieved at once from the duties and responsibilities of that office.

"In grateful remembrance, "Yours, "T. W. HAYDON." The decision stated that although they considered his recent conduct course as fatal to his future as pastor, they did not believe that there had been anything but a momentary lapse in his conduct. Mr. Handford then moved, seconded by Mr. Pasmore, "That Mr. Handford's request be not granted, but that he be dismissed from the pastorate of the church. This was carried by a vote of 75 to 16. The meeting then adjourned.
