TRUE POLICY OF THE ENGLISH COM-MERCIAL WORLD-THE BURDEN OF STANDING ARMIES.

(Pall Mall Gazette.) Our true strength in the future, as the past, and at this moment, consists in compelling the custom of foreigners by the cheapness and excellence of our goods. In this very year we shall send iron masters of Pennsylvania have reduce i their tariff, or intend to reduce it, but because Cleveland and Derbyshire and South Wales can produce iron and steel so good and cheap that it can bear the cont of carriage to New York, pay the preposterous import duty there, and still best Pittsburg and Philadelphia in the markets of the North-West, The America for the last three years will this year, for the fourth time, add to the train of beneficent economic causes which are fast obliterating within the Union the calamities of war, of the vastation of the South, of the curses of inconvertible paper money and of the monstrous speculations and frau is of 1871-3. A wave of the same abandance seems, at length to have reached Europe, Our own harvest in 1880 may be among the best we have had for a long time. It cannot be a serious failure. The same remark applies to France, Hungary, and Italy. In Germany there will be a defi cient produce, and a produce still more deficient in Russia. But taking the European harvest of 1880 as a whole if is according to actual appearances our tain that there will be no such deficiency of 15 of 20 per cent, below the average yield as there was in 1879. Raw materials are cheaper and likely to be so. The cotton crop of the United States is estimated this year at a considerable percentage over 1879. Better trade is at hand therefore, by the force of natural causes first, because the seasons are more prolific. and the earth, by the abundance of its produce, affords that wealth of commodities the exchange, applicati tribution of which alone constitute trade -for gold and silver are no more than secustomed and convenient counters. Secondly, as regards this country, because we have earned greater prosperity by the only methods which never fail, that is to say, greater frugality, greater skill greater invention, greater industry, and above all, by the noble disregard of the false aids and the delusive palliatives which other countries, to the great detriment of their people, perpetually exact from the ignorance and corruption of their Governments. In this agreeable picture there is one dark and ominous shadow. The milicary armaments of Europe have risen since 1865 from £117. 000,000 to £160,030,000 per annum, and in most of the countries, G range particular, the mere waste of venue is a trifle compered with the caste and demoralization of labor occusioned NEW BLACK SILKS by an armed force almost coextensive with the male population of the military age. The time is not distant when the strain will become too severe to by borne. and when a revolt, political in its aims. but purely economic in its origin-inasmuch as it will arise from the imposaibility of keeping a nation together when two thirds of its best labor is wastedwill turnish another example of the selfdestructive tendency of Governments which apply fendal and military principles

The Harbour Scene. Yesterday evening an accident, provocative of some merriment but which might have resulted fatally, occurred at one of the wharves. A party, consisting of a gentleman and two lady friends, were out enjoying a little boating. In disembarking one, a widow, attempted to step out first. As she placed one foot on the wharf the boat moved out and she fell into the water. She rose to the surface but appeared to be unable to read anything. Her gentleman companion broathed a prayer and then sprung to the rescue. He reached the widow but she was too heavy for him, and they went beneath the wave. Things looked serious when the young lady in the boat stretched out her hands and saved the pair from going down for good. kept them above the water until assistance came. A cab was used to convey
