To-morrow was fixed by Russia as the date beyond which she would not waittude, denoting a determination to fight document. The Porte promises to prose cute the already initiated reforms, but will not consent that a traditional foe, or even friendly nations, shall umpire the dispute between the Turkish Governmen and the disaffected Provinces. This round robin signed by the Powers, but apparently repudiated by the Turks, is acquiring an unexpected importance, as upon it will likely turn the question of peace or war. The probabilities favour the latter to-day, but we may have reason again to shift our opinion to-morrow.

The cases of Col Gray, of St. Johns, and Mr. Cluxton, of Peterborough, were cited in the late Anglin debate, to prove that Reformers in power were conniving at the very things which they strongly condemned when in opposition.
